PREFACE.

THE chief value of this compilation consists in the illustrations, and for these I wish to express my thanks to my friends—the late R. Almack, Esq., Miss Bourdillon, E. T. Bridges, Esq., Miss Chapman, Miss Dunnage, Miss Daintrey, Miss Liveing, E. Liveing, Esq., M.D., and Miss S. Rowley. To Dr. Liveing I am also indebted for much valuable help in searching the MSS. in the British Museum. I have also to express my best thanks to Mr. Frere for allowing me to search and make extracts from the MSS. in his possession, and to Mr. Overall, the Librarian of the Guildhall Library, for extracts from the Records of the City of London.

“As to the performance, I am under no concern to vindicate it from the slights and ridicules that may be cast upon it by idle and witty people, who think all history to be scraps, and all antiquity to be rust and rubbish. I say this only, next to the immediate discharge of my Holy office, I know not, how in any course of studies I could have better served my patron, my people, and my successors, than by preserving the memoirs of this parish, and the adjacent parts, which before lay remote from common notice, and in a few years had been buried in unsearchable oblivion. If the present age be too much immers'd in cares or pleasures to take any relish, or to make any use of these discoveries, I then appeal to posterity, for I believe the times will come when persons of better inclination will arise, who will be glad to find any collection of this nature, and will be ready to supply the defects, and carry on the continuation of it.”—From the “Parochial Antiquities,” by WHITE KENNETT, Vicar of Ambrosden, 1695.

STOKE BY NAYLAND.

FEW visit Suffolk in search of the picturesque. They may have heard of its pure breed of agricultural horses, and of the adaptation of its soil and climate to the cultivation of barley and other cereal crops, but they would hardly expect to meet with interesting scenery. This county is a table-land of small elevation, rising nowhere to a height of more than 335 feet above the sea-level ; ^(a) but it is intersected by numerous valleys and streams, agreeably relieving the monotony of a flat country, as well as serving for the drainage of the land and the navigation of small vessels. Of these valleys, that of the Stour, from the estuary at Manningtree, as far as Sudbury (where the river ceases to be navigable), has much on the Suffolk and Essex side of a picturesque character. Sudbury and East Bergholt are the respective birth-places of Gainsborough and Constable. May not the beauty of the woods, and lanes, and meadows of this valley have awakened the genius as well as exercised the pencils of these great artists? We have indeed the testimony of one of them that it was so. "The scene of my childhood" (says John Constable, born in East Bergholt in 1766) "made me a painter. The beauty of the " scenery, its gentle declivities, its luxuriant meadow-flats, sprinkled with flocks and " herds, its well cultivated uplands, its woods and rivers, with numerous scattered villages " and churches, farms and picturesque cottages, all impart to this delightful country an " amenity and an elegance hardly anywhere else to be found." The "Tower of Stoke " by Nayland," and a view of the same with a rainbow over it, taken from the Nayland Road, are well-known pictures by this artist. Another feature in the landscape of Suffolk is the beauty and size of its churches. A stranger would be little prepared for this in a part of England where no stone for building purposes is to be found, and few, if any, manufactories are now carried on. The epithet "Silly," which by some is supposed to apply to the ignorance and stupidity of its inhabitants, is really a recognition of the number and style of its ecclesiastical buildings. Silly is a corruption of the Anglo-Saxon "Selig"—Holy, Innocent. Silly Suffolk, then, means Holy Suffolk. Here I cannot do better than make the following extract from Leslie's Life of Constable:—

"Suffolk and other eastern counties abound in venerable Gothic churches, many " of them of a size which cannot fail to strike the stranger with admiration, as well as " surprise. A striking but melancholy characteristic is these being found in situations

(a) The highest trigonometrical station in Suffolk is Lawshall Church Tower. Ground 355·5 ft., top 410·7 ft. Distant objects are seen in all directions, except towards Newmarket, Depden; Chesburgh Church Tower, 5 miles W.N.W., being the farthest in this direction. This is very probably the highest ground in Suffolk.—
ORDNANCE SURVEY OFFICE, SOUTHAMPTON.

“comparatively lonely, some of them standing in obscure villages containing a few scattered houses, and their but little according with such large and beautiful structures; but it is thus accounted for. These spots are the seats of the once flourishing manufacturing factories, formerly so numerous in these counties, where they had, from a remote period, been established, and were during the reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII greatly increased by the continual arrival of the Flemings, who found here a refuge from the persecution of the Low Countries.” Stoke, that is by no means one of the largest, certainly ranks with the churches alluded to.

The village of Stoke by Nayland is situated about 8 miles N.W. from Colchester. It is bounded on the south by the river Stour, and on the east by the Brett, and is intersected by a small mill stream. It is the largest parish in the Hundred of Babergh, containing 5,277A. 2R. 2IP. A considerable portion of it is diversified by ridges and corresponding depressions crossed by steep and narrow lanes. The soil is generally light and gravelly. In its gravel pits are found large masses of stone. “These boulders or erratic blocks” (says Rev. W. B. Clarke, in a paper on the geological structure of Suffolk, in vol. 5, series 2nd, of the Transactions of the Geological Society) “consist of granite, basalt, porphyry, limestone, quartz, and the sandstones of the various formations, and occur in great abundance, and, occasionally, of great size. They agree in lithological character with the small fragments of the gravel, and are considered to be of the same diluvial origin, but are so conspicuous as to deserve a distinct notice. Among other localities, I may mention the valley between Scotland Street and Thorington Street, Stoke.” A block measuring 8 ft. 4 in. in length, and 5 ft. 5 in. in breadth, and 1 ft. 9 in. in thickness, lies in the back of the farmhouse at the bottom of Scotland Street.

Fossils of the different species of echinus are common in the gravel. The only rare plant, Amaranthus Blithum, is met with among garden weeds.

The principal so-called streets are the Back Street, Scotland Street, and Thorington Street. Thorington Street forms a hamlet distant about two miles from the church. Here is a large farmhouse, now in the occupation of Mr. Edward Simson Parson, which, from its spacious entrance hall, two staircases, and fine stack of chimneys, must have been built by some wealthy proprietor. At the lower part of Scotland Street stands another large farmhouse, the residence of Mr. James Benham, one wing of which has been removed, but two wide staircases are left. The entrance hall is a large and lofty room, 25 ft. by 23 ft., and height 14 ft. The oak panels which were broken and decayed have been replaced by paper, with the exception of the space over the mantelpiece which has some good wood carving; there is a tradition that in a field belonging to this farm on the west side of the house there was a vineyard some time in the last century. The farmhouse now occupied by Mr. Thomas Dyer, conspicuous by its row of fine poplars, added to the Tendring property by purchase from the Henneker family, must once have been a much larger mansion; the gable ends of these, as well as of other buildings in the village, have lost much of their picturesque appearance by the shortening of the rafters, and the removal of the barge boards. The Back Street still retains two good specimens of timber building, the old workhouse, built in 1619, formerly the Guildhall, and a row of buildings lately restored by Sir Charles Rowley.

The only remaining part of the old Tendring Hall is a stack of chimneys at the back of the stables, of which a drawing is given. The present mansion was erected in the last century by Sir John Soane.

Stoke Priory was taken down in 1829, and on its site a good brick house was placed by the late Mr. John Hoy, now in the possession of W. Hoy, Esq.

The length of the parish, from Higham Bridge to its junction with Assington on the west, is nearly six miles. Its width from north to south varies from one to two miles.

The west end of the parish, formerly an extensive heath, was enclosed in the year 1820. It now forms part of the Leavenheath district, in which, for the accommodation of the inhabitants of Stoke, Assington, Polstead, Nayland, and Wissington, inconveniently distant from their parish churches, a small church dedicated to St. Matthias, a parsonage house, and a school-room, were built by subscription and donations in the year 1835. In the year 1863 it was formed into an ecclesiastical district, and in 1875 a new school-room, capable of accommodating 75 children, was built through the energy of the present Vicar, Rev. H. Wattsford, and the expenses defrayed by private subscription, a Government grant, and the Diocesan Society.

Nothing at first sight seems more hopeless and unpromising than the search after the early history of our Parishes and Parish Churches. The records of them on the spot are few and scanty. The Registers of Births, Marriages, and Deaths seldom go farther back than 1558, the first year of Queen Elizabeth's reign. The monuments and brasses are mostly in a mutilated state; if the figure is left, the armorial bearings and inscriptions are gone; generally both have disappeared, and nothing remains but the matrix, leaving the bare outline and size of the figure and of the inscriptions. In most churches they suffered much from the Parliamentary Commission; "we brake down" 100 superstitious pictures, and gave orders for the levelling of the steps in the chancel, "and took up seven superstitious inscriptions on the tombstones 'Ora pro nobis.'" (Dowsing's Journal, Stoke by Nayland, Jan. 19, 1643.) But many were defaced before Dowsing's visit. In 1637 the brasses and the figures on the tombstone of Sir John Howard and Alicia, his wife, were stolen away, and Dowsing left much untouched which the ignorance, carelessness, and cupidity of later, even of recent, days have destroyed or removed. Happily the establishment of Archæological Societies has arrested the progress of destruction and led to closer investigation; and as this goes on light breaks in from unsuspected quarters, and the field at first sight most barren is found to contain valuable treasures. The present condition of the monumental remains in Stoke Church would lead few to suppose that the place had been the residence of many families of historical interest, the Alfgars, the Peytons, the Tendrings, the Constables, the Giffords, and the Rokewoods.

The earliest notice of Stoke is in Bishop Tanner's Notitia monastica. As early as the middle of the 10th century, he says, here was a monastery of some note, and many good donations were made thereto by Earl Alfgar, and afterwards by his two daughters, Æthelfled and Ægelfled ; this being the burial place of that noble family, and perhaps founded by some of them. "Vide testamenta Æthelfledæ et Ægelfledæ filiarum comitis Ælfgar ex cartis Harleyanis evulgata (Saxonice et Latine), quod, una cum testamentis filiarum suarum, M.S., extat in Registro Sacristæ Cænobii Buriensis haud ita pridem in "Bibliotheca R. "The will of Lady Æthelfled, the widow of Duke Æthelstan :—

"This is the will of Æthelfled.

"In the first place I give to my lord the King that land lying at Lamburne and Chelsea¹ and Reding,² and four coronets which weigh 200 manhusæ³ of gold, and four scarlet curtains, and four goblets, and four plates, and four horses ; and I beseech my most august lord, by his love to God, to have this my will carried out, for I call God to witness that I have made no other.

"I also give my farm lying in Domerham to the Monastery of Glastonbury,⁴ as well for the safety of the soul of King Edmund, as for that of King Ædgar and my own. I also give my farm lying in Ham⁵ to Christ Church, Canterbury,⁶ for the safety of my own soul and that of King Edmund. Moreover, I give that land lying at Woodham⁷ to Count Berthnoth and my sister, to be held by them during their lives, and after they are both deceased I give it to the Church of Barking⁸ (or Bocking).⁹

"I also give my farm lying at Hedham⁹ (or Heddingham), to Count Berthnoth and my sister for their life-time, but after they have both deceased I give it to the Church of St. Paul, towards the maintenance of the domestic establishment of the Bishop. I also give that land at Fen Ditton¹⁰ to St. Ætheldrytha of Ely, and to her sisters of the convent. I also give those two farms at Cockfield¹¹ and Chelsworth,¹² to Count Berthnoth and my sister, to be enjoyed by them during their lives ; and on the death of both of them, I give them to the burial place of St. Edmund, for the maintenance of the clergy, who guard the body of the Saint in St. Mary's Church, Bury St. Edmunds.¹³ I also give my land in Fingrenhoe¹⁴ to Count Berthnoth and my sister, as long as they live ; but after the death of each, I give it to St. Peter's Church, Mersea.¹⁵

"I also give my land at Polstead¹⁶ to Count Berthnoth and my sister for their lives ;

"that during my lifetime he will be my defender and administrator, and on my death
"will assist in carrying out my will and the wills of my ancestors."

The boundaries of the lands are not given in the Latin translation.

Count Berthnoth, as he is called in these wills, or in the ancient chronicles Brithnot, Ealdorman of the East Angles, was killed in battle with the Danes in 991. This year there was a great invasion of the Danes, or rather the Norwegians, in the Eastern parts of England; they harried or plundered Ipswich, and then attacked the coast of Essex, and sailed up the Planta or Blackwater as far as Maldon, where the battle was fought which ended fatally to this soldier, one of the few who bravely resisted the invaders. He helped to found the Abbey of Ely, where he was buried, and where his wife Ægelfled offered a piece of tapestry in which she had worked a picture of all her husband's great actions.

There are no traces of a monastery now in Stoke.

Wolton, the translator of these wills from the Danish Saxon into Latin, adds:—

"Many places of this name Stoke in England were famous for their sanctity, as Stoke, which is now called Stoke Clare, in Suffolk, which may be the place where the ancestors of Æthelfled were buried."

But the towns and places spoken of in these testamentary documents, Polstead, Wissington, Withermarsh, Hadleigh, &c., being far nearer Stoke by Nayland than Stoke Clare, the burial place of these noble ladies was no doubt in the former.

Earl Alfgar lived in the reign of Edmund, the Father of St. Edith, and Theodore, Bishop of London.

The present church is probably on the site of this richly endowed monastery and burial ground.

The next notice we find in Domesday book, which thus describes the manors of Stoke and Withermarsh.

BABERGH HUNDRED.

"Rotbert holds Stokes in the time of King Edward for a manor, there being four "carucates of land, together with socage. At that time (i.e., in the days of Edward the "Confessor) there were twenty-five villeins, now fifteen. Then thirty-two bordairs, now
"twenty-three. Then eight serfs, now six. Then two carucates in demesne, now three.
"Then twelve ploughmen, now seven. Now two mills and thirty-five acres of pasture,
"wood for sixty hogs, now three horses, now eight young cattle, now twenty hogs, now
"seventy sheep, now four goats. Then the value of the manor was ten pounds, now
"twelve. The church has sixty acres of free land. In the same village are eleven free
"men. Rotbert has protection and the right of socage. There was a caracate of land
"among them, but they were able to sell it, and one free man. Twelve acres under the "protection of Rotbert, but with the saca and soca belonging to the saint. Among these

“ there was one carucate and a half at that time, now one, and the value thirty shillings. “ It is eight furlongs in length, and four in breadth. The gelt or tax is twenty pence.

“ Rotbert, the father of Sweni (Swayne) held Withermers in the time of King Edward for a manor, there being four carucates of land together with socage. At that time twenty-seven villeins, now twenty-four. Then thirty-two bordairs, now twenty-seven. Then two serfs, now one. Then three carucates in demesne, now two. Then thirteen ploughmen, now eight. There was also one mill, thirty acres of pasture, now two horses, and twenty ploughs ; now twenty-four hogs and mares turned out into the woods ; now eighty sheep. At that time valued at ten pounds, now twelve. It is eight furlongs in length, and four in breadth. The gelt is twenty pence.”

As churches are rarely mentioned in the account of the manors or parishes in Domesday book, it seems that the church at Stoke by Nayland must have then been conspicuous. The present church is dedicated to St. Mary. From its commanding situation and the peculiar character of the tower it forms one of the most striking features of the surrounding neighbourhood.

The tower is divided into four stages, separated from each other by five string courses. The west door is of oak, elegantly panelled. The arch over it is richly ornamented with an ogee label crocketed. On either side of the label are the arms of Tendring and Howard, and the engaged shafts rising from the labelled mouldings on either side are terminated by the supporters of the shields of those families. Over the west entrance is a fine perpendicular window of eight lights, a transom intervening. The arch is fitted with rich tracery. Over the arch, which is boldly moulded, is also an ogee crocketed label. The third stage has a window with four lights, with plain tracery ; and on the fourth is one of three lights, having the arch filled with tracery ; the north, south, and east have each two windows, the lower of four, the upper of three lights. Below the upper moulding of the base of the tower is a rich cusped panelling filled with shields. The parapet of the tower is also richly panelled, and the coping boldly embrasured. The pinnacles at some period have been badly restored, and rise eight feet higher than the parapet.

The bold massive buttresses, placed diagonally, which is a peculiar feature of this tower, consist of five stages, each with two canopied niches, the three lower resting on elongated pedestals ; the pedestals of the two upper are very short. The height of this tower is about 120 feet.

The church itself is of great length, with good perpendicular windows in the nave, with thirteen clerestory windows on the north, and the same number on the south. The total length of the church internally, including chancel and tower, is 168 feet, and the total width 58 feet at the west, and 59 feet 3 inches at the east end. The walls of the nave and chancel are not parallel ; the width of the middle aisle of the nave at the west end being 21 feet 4 inches, and against the chancel end being 20 feet 2 inches, and the width of the chancel against the nave is 19 feet 11 inches, and under the east window is 19 feet 1 inch, the south walls inclining towards the north from the west end. The length of the nave is 100 feet, the height 37 feet. The door is covered with elaborately carved figures, but the decayed work has been so often painted that it is difficult to make them out. The width of the north aisle varies from 15 feet 7 inches to 15 feet 11 inches, and of the south aisle 16 feet 10½ inches to 17 feet 1½ inch.

STOKE CHURCH, WEST DOOR.

STOKE CHURCH, EAST END.

The south porch is in a sadly mutilated state, and its projection has been shortened. It must formerly have been a very fine entrance, and is of older date than the rest of the church. The roof is groined, and the windows on the east and west side are decorated. In the intersection of the groining is a figure of the Virgin and Child. A room over it contains a parish library, bequeathed by one of the former vicars, Rev. Thomas Reeve, who was presented to the vicarage in 1685.—See Appendix.

The north porch is an excellent specimen of moulded brickwork, and has a good oak roof, and blocks up part of one of the windows of the north side. It is of later date than the rest of the church, but no doubt was added on before the Reformation, as it contains a stoup, a niche for holy water.

The entrance from the tower into the church is through a very lofty arch; the outer moulding running down to the panelled base of shields of the buttresses, which project on each side into the church.

It contains a peal of six bells in E-flat; the weight of the tenor being 28 cwt.

The bells bear the following inscriptions:—

First.

✠ ✠ ✠ THOMAS ✠ GARDINER ✠ FECIT ✠ ✠ 1725.

[The rest of the label filled up with scroll work.]

Second.

Beneath the label is a short inscription no longer legible.

CHURCHWARDENS 1811.

Several notices of the bells will be found in the extracts from the Churchwardens' book given later on.

The Font, placed at the west end, is octagonal. In its panels are carved the emblems of the Evangelists, with figures in the alternate panels. The shaft contains eight niches with ogee and decorated canopies. It is raised on three unusually high steps—the two lower ones are octagonal, the upper one is of the form of a cross. The date appears to be of the 15th century by the shield on the front step being charged with the Rose en soleil, the Yorkist badge assumed by Edward the Fourth after the battle of Mortimer's Cross in 1461. The shield on the west has the arms of Tendring and Howard united. The carving on the north and south shields is of modern date.

The dimensions of the Font are as follows :—

	ft.	in.
Height	3	3½
Height of steps	2	4½
Diameter across the top of the bowl...	2	8
Depth of the bowl	1	0
Diameter of the bowl	1	10

The nave is separated from the north and south aisles by six arches on each side with two responds. The roof of the nave is flat, of oak, resting on brackets, the four on each side nearest the western arch of the tower having very fine carved corbels. The string course below the clerestory windows is enriched with carved angels. On the side of the north aisle of the nave, near the chancel end, is a small chapel built in the early part of the 14th century, by John de Peydone, dedicated to St. Edmund. (Vide Peyton Manor.)

Between the nave and chancel is a lofty arch boldly moulded. The chancel is separated from the north and south chapels by two arches, one pier, and two responds. It extends some way beyond these side chapels, and has a piscina with an ogee crocketed moulding on the south wall. In the north chapel of the chancel is a piscina of early English workmanship, placed evidently in the wall of an earlier church.

The following notices of the former condition of the church, &c., are taken from the old Churchwardens' book. I have given them as they stand in the spelling of the day :—

FONT IN STOKE CHURCH.

STOKE CHURCH, FROM NORTH-EAST CORNER.

" 1683.—In the Churchwardens' account for the yeare 1663:—

" For the building the church porch and levelling the floor, £13.

" In this year many repairs were done to the church and churchyard wall.

" For cutting down the fire (ivy) that grew about the church.

" Paid for two books, one of Artikells, 2s., and the other of the Church Canons, 2s. 8d.

" Paid for a Common Prayer Book and a dozen of Church Catechizes, 1s. 6d.

" For 3 bottles of wine for Easter Sacrament, 7s. 6d.

" For bread " " 1s. 0d.

" 1686.—13 July it was ordered in a towne meeting by those inhabitants then present, that Isaac Jacob and John Wilsher then present, and consenting thereto, to the order as followeth:—

" That they shall scrape off all the decayed places of the playstering within the church, and to playster the same, and to wash and stope all the holles (holes), and to scrape the pillows, and to white the church all over with Spanish white, and to paint it round with a wainscotte culow laid in oyles, and the pillows five foote and two inches from the ground, and to black the heads of the pillows, and to painte the funte (font) with a marball culow in oyle. Secondly, to playster the north and south side of midell isle of the church above the leads, and to repair the pillows of the windows, and to make new pillows where they shall be wanting above, and to finish in the glasse when it is set up, above and below, for eighteen pounds.

(Signed) " ISAAC JACOB,

" JOHN WILSHER, Workmen.

" 1686.—Ordered at a parish meeting by the major part of the parishioners then present, that the churchwardens then present shall buy a decent communion table-cloth, made of cloth, with a silk fringe, not exceeding the value of seven pounds. That the churchwardens shall dye the green cloth belonging to the church into black, and the towne shall have it for their use, to bury those that die, and to be kept in the town chest.

" 1689.—An agreement made between the churchwardens and parishioners, and John Lindsay, about setting the clock and chimes in the stepell of the said parish church a gooing, and keeping of the same.

" 1699.—Whereas the 5th bell in the steeple belonging to the parish church was accidentally split in ringing a peal on Sunday, 23rd September last, we whose names are hereunto subscribed to prevent any charge or trouble which may happen to the said bell, new cast or run, order that the churchwardens shall cause bellfounder to be present at the next parish meeting, that parishioners may agree with him for the running and casting ye said bell as soon as may be, and the said parishioners at vestry agreed to spend not more than ten shillings in eating and drinking, to be paid by the overseer.

" 1700.—It is ordered that the churchwardens do rayle in the communion table at the charge of the parish.

" 1725.—Agreed with Thomas Gardner to new cast the second bell, which is split, and the treble, and to find all materials, to be at the charge of taking them down, hanging them up again, carrying them to and from Sudbury, and all other charges whatsoever in timber stock, wheel and iron work, and all other charges, for the sum of £14. The second to be returned in full weight as she is now; of the treble to be added as much as shall make her tuneable to the rest of the bells now in the steeple."

In 1865 the church was renovated at a considerable expense. The string course was restored. New clerestory windows were put in. The foundations of the piers, which had been undermined by vaults and graves and had gradually given way, were under-pinned. A reredos, composed of canopied arches and marble shafts, with angels supporting the canopies, supplies the place of a painting of Moses and Aaron. The church was benched with oak. A pulpit of oak resting on a base of Caen stone richly ornamented with shafts of Languedoc marble, a reading desk of oak panelled, and altar rails of oak were added. The gallery at the west end was taken down, and the organ was moved into the chancel. The floor was repaired throughout. The church and chancel, up to the west side of the south entrance and from thence to the centre of the tower arch, was paved with squares. The space enclosed by the altar rails is paved with Sicilian and black marble. New oak ceilings were also put to the chancel. The west window of the church is filled with painted glass consisting of eight figures. In the lower range of lights are those of Faith, Hope, Charity, and Mercy. In the upper range those of the four Evangelists. In the tracery is placed the cross and the sacred monogram. Below is this inscription:—

"To the beloved memory of Sir William Rowley, Bart., and of his wife, Susan, Edith, this window is placed by their daughter Emma Letitia. Presented to the church by Miss Rowley, of Holbecks, executed by Messrs. O'Connor."

The stained window in the chancel, by the same artist, represents the crucifixion and ascension of our Lord. The cost of this window was defrayed by subscription. The east windows of the chapels are also filled with stained glass, that in the north chapel, presented by Rear-Admiral Forbes, illustrates the adoration of the infant child Jesus; that in the south chapel, the raising of the Widow of Nain's son. Both these windows were executed by M. Capronnier, of Brussels. A memorial window was put into the south aisle, March, 1876, with the following inscription:—

"The Master is come and calleth for thee. To the glory of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost."—March, 1876.

On the removing the plaster over the arch of St. Edmund's Chapel, two fresco drawings were discovered, of which careful copies were made. Also on removing the plaster from the wall over the chancel arch an inscription was brought to light, overlaying an older painting. The tips of the wings of angels were manifest; they were probably the remains of a larger drawing, such as that discovered over the nave arch of Rotherham Church about 1840, representing our Lord and the twelve Apostles, with other saints and angels in the act of adoration. The character of the letters, and the spelling of the only words of the inscription which escaped the workman's pick, tend to the conclusion that the drawing was overlaid about the close of the 16th, or beginning of the 17th century.

The following words left legible sufficiently indicate that the texts inscribed were—
Rev. i. 7, 8; II Corinthians v. 16:—

“ hym, even so, Amen. I am

“ the endynge sayeth

“ which is to come

“ and the glory

“ Ayes

“ Therefore henceforth know we no man after the fleshe. Inasmuch as though we “ have knowen Christ after the fleshe, yet now henceforth knowe we hym so no more.”

The restorations and repairs of the church were carried out according to the plans, and under the superintendence of John Gibson, Esq., architect; defrayed at the sole expense of Sir C. R. Rowley, Bart., of Tendring Hall, and of members of his family.

If the Vicars of Stoke had recorded during their several incumbencies such accounts of the state of the gravestones, brasses, and monuments as John Hankin, who was presented to the living in 1606, and died in 1627, has left behind him, what a valuable legacy would have been bequeathed to after generations!

“ Several monuments appertaining to the Right Honorable the Tendrings and “ Howards within the chancel isle (sic) in Stoke Church.

“ Imprimis, in Tendring nave appeareth three antient monuments, in likelihood the “ antients of the Tenderings.

“ In the same chappell there is another monument subscribed as followeth:—

“ Hic jacet Katerina de Tendring quondam uxor Thomæ Clopton, quæ obiit die “ veneris ante Festum Pentecost anno Dñi. 1403, cujus animæ propitiatur Deus.

“ Altera in eadem Capella.

“ Hic jacent tumulati Dñs Willimus Tendering miles et Dña. Katerina Clopton, uxor “ ejusdem, qui obierunt anno Dñi. 1408, et quorum animabus propitiatur Deus.

“ Altera ibidem.

“ Orate pro animabus Johannis Howard militis, qui obiit anno Dñi. 14 . . . , et Aliciæ “ uxoris ejus, quæ obiit in Festo Sancti Luce Evangeliste anno Dñi. 1426, quorum “ animabus propitiatur Deus. Amen.”

“ In altissimo ejusdem Capellæ is another monument with an inscription as followeth:—

“ Under this stone is buried the body of the Right Honorable woman and lady, “ sometime wife, unto the most high and mighty Prince Lord John Howard, Duke of “ Norfolk, and mother unto the most noble and puissant Prince, Lord Howard, Duke

"also of Norfolk. This lady departed this life in the year of our Lord 1456, whose soul
"Jesus pardon."*

"Close by the wall is a tomb of the height of a yard, bearing thereon diverse
"impressions, but now the brasses being taken away, all defaced.

"Beneath that another monument subscribed as followeth:—

"Hic jacet D^{na}. Johanna Redmeld quondam uxor Gulielmi Redmeld militis et filia
"recolendæ memoriæ D^{na}e Margaritæ Howard Ducessæ Norfolcis, hic superius tumulatæ,
"quæ obiit vicesimo die Februarii anno Dⁿⁱ. 1500, cujus animæ propitiatur Deus."

"This is verbatim according to the several monuments and subscriptions taken by
"me, John Hankyn, Vicar of the same place."

The next extract is from Weever's Funereal Monuments.

"STOKE BY NAYLAND.

"This church is highly honoured by the sepulture of diverse of the illustrious family
"of the Howards.

"In the east window of the south part of the church are the portraits of Sir John
"Howard, Knight, and Dame Alice, his wife, daughter and heiress of Sir William
"Tendring, Knight, with the subscription following:—

"Orate pro animabus Johannis Howard et dominæ Aliciæ, uxoris ejus."

"Upon a fair marble, though much defaced, in the choir:—

"Orate pro animabus Johannis Howard, militis, qui obiit . . . 1400 et Aliciæ uxoris
"ejus, quæ obiit in festo Sancte Luce evangeliste, 1426."

"Upon the pavement before the high altar lieth an antient gravestone, having
"thereof the figure of a knight in complete armor, resting his head upon his gauntlet,
"with this inscription:—

"Hic jacent tumulati, dominus Willelmus Tendring, miles, et Katerina Clopton
"(sic) uxor ejusdem. Obierunt anno domini 1408. Domina Johanna Redmeld quondam
"sponsa Willelmi Redmeld, militis, ac filia recolende memorie domine Margarete
"Howard ducisse Norfolcie hic superius tumulate. Obiit xx Feb. M.D."

"Near unto the same, upon the pavement, is also another monument with
"the circumscription as hereunder appeareth, the brasses of the figures, and some "of the arms thereof, are most impiously stolen away, and so is the brass of the "inscriptions, arms, and images of three other fair stones lying there near." [Here is inserted a drawing of the last mentioned monument as it was in Weever's time.]
"Under this stone is buried the body of the right honorable woman and ladie, some-
"time wife unto the right high and mighty Prince, Lord John Howard, Duke of Norfolk,

* As Lord Thomas Howard was not created Duke before 1513, this brass must have been placed as late as this year, and thus the error of the date of her death, which took place in 1465, not in 1456, is accounted for.

“ and mother unto the right noble and puissant Prince, Lord Thomas Howard, Duke
 “ also of Norfolk, which lady departed this present life 1452.

“ In the south part of the said church, between the high altar and the choir, is a “ monument with this similitude and subscription:—

“ Afore mentioned of the right honorable lady Katherine, daughter of William “ Lord Molin's, the first wife of John Howard, Duke of Norfolk, who was the son of “ Sir Robert Howard, and of Margaret his wife, daughter and co-heiress of Thomas “ Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, son of John Lord Mowbray, and Elizabeth his wife, “ daughter and heiress of John Lord Segrave, and Margaret, Dutchess of Norfolk, the “ daughter and heiress of Thomas of Brotherton, the fifth son of Edward I, the which “ he had by Margaret his second wife, the daughter of the French King, Philip III.”

“ TENDRING HALL CHAPEL IN THE PARISH OF STOKE “ JUXTA NEYLAND.

“ In the east window of the private chapel of Tendring Hall in the said parish of “ Stoke juxta Neyland, is the effigies above shewed, which is supposed by reason of the “ quarterings in his coat of arms to be made for John Lord Howard, after created Duke
 “ of Norfolk, in which and in the foresaid monument is to be observed that, according “ to the antient rule, the coat armor of the blood royal is placed in the first quarter “ before the paternal coat.

“ Hic Katerina de Tenderyng quondam uxor Thome Clopton quæ obiit “ die Veneris ante festum Pentecostes MCCCCII.

“ Lady Windsore daughter of Sir William Walgrave.”

“ At the upper end in the north side of this church, next to the chancel, John de “ Peyton, the son of Reginald, lieth interred under a marble stone, about the verge “ whereof these few French words are only remaining:—

“ Jena de Peytona, mercye . . . lame Crist.”

“ Under another marble stone adjoining, his son Sir John Peyton, Knight, lieth “ inhumed with this French inscription:—

“ Vous qe par ici passet

“ Pur l'ame Sire Jehan de Peytona priet

“ Le cours de oi ici gist :

“ L'ame receyue Ihu crist. Amen.”

“ These Peytons had their mansion at Peyton Hall, in Boxford, not far hence.

“ Antient Funeral Monuments, by John Weever.

“ From my house in Clerkenwell Close, this 28th of May, 1631.”

a “ The office of Sewer was to place in order the dishes at a Feast. In ‘ Leland’s Collectanea,’ we have accounts “ of the Feasts given at the respective enthronizations of Archbishop Neville and Archbishop Warham. Among “ the different officers employed the Sewer stands conspicuous. It appears that he at different times was to go to
“ the dresser, and there take ‘ say’ or ‘ assay’ of every dish. The manner of doing so is described, and it appears “ to have been a very important business, similar to that of Cupbearer in tasting or assaying the drink. At the Feast “ given by Warham to Henry VIII. and Charles the V. on their way through Canterbury from Dover, the Duke of “ Buckingham as Sewer rode upon a white hobby before the banqueting dishes, and after some ceremony he rode
“ to the table, when he delivered his hobby and sword, kneeling at the table where the Emperor was.”

“ to Hugh Bigod, Earl of Norfolk. This Reginald was living in 1138, and had two sons,
 “ John de Peyton and William de Peyton. John was Lord of Peyton Hall in Ramsholt, “ and Peyton Hall in Stoke. His lands were confirmed to him by King Stephen. His “ wife’s name was Agnes, and he had at least four sons, John the elder, Peter, John the “ younger, and Walter. Of these sons Peter inherited the Lordship of Peyton Hall in “ Ramsholt, and lived in the reigns of Henry the 2nd and John. He had two sons, “ Robert and Henry. Henry held a fee in Ramsholt of his brother Robert, called “ Howards, and took the name of Howard from it. Collins suggests that the Dukes
 “ of Norfolk came of this stock. John de Peyton, junr. (styling himself ‘Ego sæpe “ ‘nominatus Johannes de Peitune, junr.’), sold his land at Boxford and Stoke, which his “ father and uncle William held of the Abbey of Bury, to his eldest brother John. It
 “ may be noticed here that the name of William de Tendring, son of John de Tendring, “ first occurs as a witness to a deed of this John.

“ John the elder was Lord of Peyton Hall in Boxford, part of his land being in “ Stoke, temp. Richard I. and Henry III. He married Maud, the daughter and heiress of “ Geoffry de Stamundeshey. He was buried in Stoke Church, under a marble stone having “ a French inscription, in Saxon characters, of which the following words alone remain :—

“ Jena de Peytona . . . mercye l’ame Christ.

“ He had two sons, Sir John de Peyton, the first knight of that name, and Robert.
 “ This Robert was Lord Chief Justice of Ireland in the 53rd of Henry III (A.D. 1268),
 “ and was Lord of the Manor of Ufford in Suffolk, which name he assumed. He died
 “ in the 26th of Edward I., A.D. 1298. His son, Robert de Ufford, was created Earl of “ Suffolk 1336. Another son, John, was Chancellor and Archbishop of Canterbury, “ elect, but died before his institution, June 7th, 1348. He was buried in Canterbury
 “ Cathedral. (See ‘Weever’s Monuments,’ p. 222.)

“ Sir John Peyton succeeded his father as Lord of Peyton Hall in Boxford. He is “ stated to have had great store of land in Cavendish, Waldingfield, Assington, Stoke “ Nayland, and other places, in the time of Henry III. He married Matilda de Bueris, “ heiress to her uncle (? brother) Simon de Notelo or Notelewell, who gave John de “ Peyton lands in Boxford. He lies buried by his father in Stoke Church in the rank
 “ of a knight, with the cross and a mullet, under a marble stone, with this French “ inscription round the edge :—

“ Vous qe par ici passet

“ Pur l’ame sire Jehan de Peytona priet

“ Le course de oi ici gist

“ L’ame receyue I. H. U. Crist. Amen.

“ This Sir John had by Matilda de Bueris, three sons, John, William, and James (James
 “ was the head of another branch of the Peytons. He was witness to deeds of his “ brother Sir John in 1304 and 1309), and two daughters, both named in the will of “ their brother Sir John, Agnes and Egidia.

"Sir John de Peyton, second knight, Lord of Peyton Hall in Boxford, was knight of the shire for Suffolk in the 29th of Edward I., 1300. He was thrice married, 1st to Aves or Hawes, 2nd Clementine, widow of Weyland, 3rd Agnes. His will is dated the 10th of Edward II., A.D., 1316, and proved 7th Cal. February. He was buried in Stoke Church with his three wives, in the chapel which he himself had built, as appears from his will, which follows:—

"In nomine Patris et filii et spiritus sancti. Amen. Die lunæ proxim. ante festum Sancti Nicholas Anno Domini Millesimo ccc^{mo} xvi. TRANSLATION OF THE SAID WILL.

"In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. On Monday, before the Festival of St. Nicholas, A.D. 1316, I, John de Peytone, Knight, being of sound memory, make my will as follows:—

"In the first place I bequeath my soul to God, and my body to be buried in the Parish Church of Stoke Nayland, before the altar of St. Edmund, namely in the Chapel which I built in the north part of the same Church.

"I also bequeath to the High Altar of the same Church, instead of the horse which will go in front of my body on the day of my burial, and instead of the complete harness of the same horse, and also of the rider, 5 marks with the assent and consent of the Vicar of the same Church. I also bequeath to the same High Altar for (tithes) forgotten, 1 mark.

"I also bequeath for the ceremonies of the day of my funeral, and that I may shine in my proper state, and for the completion of the same, 20 marks. I also bequeath for the completion of the cemetery of my before-mentioned Chapel in the north part of the Church of Stoke by Nayland 30s. to be laid out in stone and lime, and for anything wanting of this kind for the aforesaid work. I also bequeath for the aforesaid work the whole wages and the lead which I have prepared and pre-assigned for this work. But the carpentry work and the covering of the same should be done according to the directions of my son Robert de Peytone. I also bequeath to John de Peyton, my son, 20 marks. I also bequeath to James de Peytone, my brother, 40s., also to my daughter Egidia, the nun of Mallyng, 20s. I also bequeath to Ade of Sayham, 1 mark and 2 quarters of corn; also to the wife of the same Ade 1 quarter of corn. Also to John Bolevyle, my jester, half a quarter of corn. Also the coachman (careatario) of Peytone, 2 bushels of corn. I also bequeath to my sister Agnes, 1 quarter of corn. Also to Robert Gernoun, 1 quarter of corn. I also bequeath for the completion of the covering of the Chapel of Nayland with tile, 4 marks. I also bequeath to Master Reginald de Peytone, Canon of St. Osyth, half a mark. I also bequeath to Christina, the wife of Robert de Peytone, my whole wardrobe (?) I also bequeath to James de Bures, my better (?) best) buckle. I also leave to Lady

"Egidia, my sister, one gold buckle. I also bequeath to Thomas de Chesteleyn, 1 gold ring worth 2 shillings; also to Roisia, his wife, 1 gold ring worth 2 shillings. Also to Hawisia, my daughter, 1 silver buckle; and the remainder of all my goods not contained or bequeathed in this will I leave to Robert Peytone, my son, on condition that my debts be paid. And I ordain and appoint, for the carrying out of the provisions of my will, Robert de Peyton, my son, and Adam de Sayham, my executors. In corroboration and proof of this, I have set to my seal in their presence.

"Given at my house, Peytone, Stoke Nayland, the day and year before-mentioned.

"Endorsed. { "This will was proved before us, in the Parish Church of Meleford, the Master the Archdeacon of Sudbury, the 7 Calend.

"of February, in the year of our Lord 1318, and the administration of all the goods belonging to the aforesaid will was granted to the executors named in the aforesaid will, and lawfully sworn."

It would seem from the concluding part of this will, that Sir John resided at Stoke.

PEYTON.

His family by Avis consisted of Robert, John, named in his father's will, Rose, married to Thomas de Chastelyn, who died about 1381, Hawyse Avis, living in 1348, and Egidia, a nun of Mallyng in Kent.

Sir Robert de Peyton, his eldest son, was Lord of Peyton Hall, Boxford, and in most of his deeds is called the Chevalier and Monsier. He married twice. His first wife was Lady Cristina de Appleton, relict of William de Appleton. She died 19th Edward II., A.D. 1325, and was buried in Stoke Church with great pomp. Her funeral expenses are thus down:—

" 50 Quarters of wheat	£ 4 10 0
" X Hogsheads of wine	53 4 0 ,
" 4 Muttons	0 5 0 ,
" 8 Barrow hogs... ..	1 4 0
" 10 Calves	— —
" &c., &c., &c."

Sir Robert's second wife was Joan de Marney, of Laver Marney, Essex, living 23rd Edward III., A.D. 1349. Sir Robert died A.D. 1351, and was buried in the Chapel in Stoke Church, by the side of his father.

Sir John de Peyton, Knight, the eldest son of Sir Robert, was living in the 17th of Richard II., 1393, and in 10th of Henry IV., 1408, and was buried at Stoke. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Guernon, Knight, of Lees, in Essex, Lord of Wicken, county Cambridge, and of Blackwell, county Derby. She died in the 2nd year of Henry V., 1414, and was buried at Wicken. The eldest son of this Sir John de Peyton died without offspring. The second son, John de Peyton, married Joan, daughter and heiress of Sir Hamon Sutton, Knight of Wickesho, died about 1404, and was buried at Stoke. His will is dated 1404.

Since then, no burials of the Peyton family are recorded to have taken place in Stoke. Peyton Hall and some farms in the neighbourhood were sold about 10 years ago.

Peyton Hall, now in the possession of B. Lungley, Esq., although diminished in size, is one of the most picturesque buildings in the neighbourhood.

The following extracts from Church notes by Sir John Blois, relate to the chapel built by Sir John de Peyton :—

PEYTON.

“ Extract from Church notes by Sir John Blois—

“ Glass. Gu. 3 bugle horns (? if for Roding) thrice in an isle (sic) built by him (ut videtur) with a gravestone with this coat where an armed man”

Gravestones.

“ Also in the isle or small chapel, where the three bugles are thrice in the glasse, there is a stone with an armed man in brass, and the same coat in brasse uppon the stone, the name stolen. That isle did belong to a house called Roding House.

“ Nighe Roding Isle are two gravestones for two of the Peytons, written about in French as in the book of monuments, p. 776. This refers to Weever's funeral monuments (edit. 1631), who gives the following account :—

“ At the upper end on the north side of this Church, next to the chancel, John de Peyton, the son of Reginald, lieth interred under a marble stone; about the verge whereof are these few French words following only remaining :—

“ Le cours de oi ici gist

“ L'ame receyue I. H. U. Crist. Amen.

“ Under another marble stone adjoining, his son, Sir John Peyton, Knight, lieth interred, with this inscription in French :—

“ Vous qe par ici passet

“ Pur' l'ame Sire Jehan de Peytona priet

“ Le course de oi ici gist

“ L'ame receyue I. H. U. Crist. Amen.

Before the Church was restored, in the north window of this chapel, were the arms, supporters, and a motto of England, in a square compartment, but in the upper Dexter corner had been inserted these arms of Hull (?)

“ ‘ Erm, 3 lozenges, Gu,’ and under them ‘ Me Regem’”

“ Over the arch is the crest of Henniker, an escallop shell or, charged with an étoile gu.

“ On removing the floor of this chapel a stone was brought to light with this inscription :—

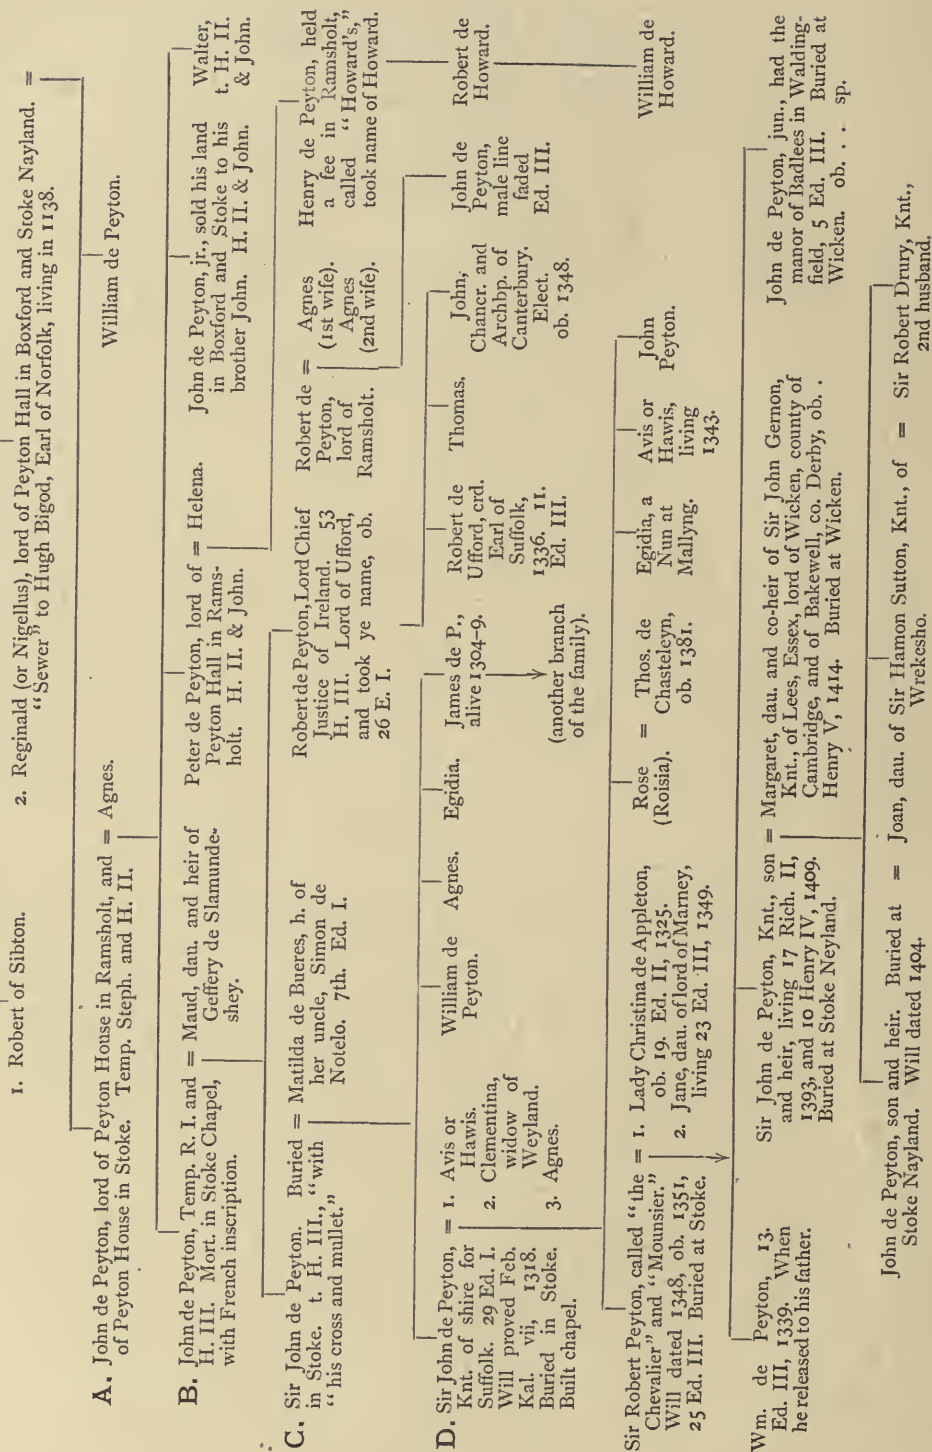

“ M. S.

“ Here lieth interred the body of Anne Shawe, late wife of John Shawe, of Colchester, Esq., by whom she had left three sons and a daughter. She died January ye fifth, Anno Domini 1690. A woman esteemed by her friends, and beloved by her neighbours, is wanted by the poor, and lamented by all who knew her.

“ And on taking off the whitewash from the wall over the arch of this chapel in 1845, were the two figures ; of which careful and accurate drawings were made by Miss Liveing.”

STOKE VICARAGE.

" The Vicar of Stoke holds the rent-charge also of Nayland, Nayland in the reign
 " of Henry VI. being a Hamlett de Neyland, or percell villæ de Stoke, and the proper
 " description of the vicarage is of Stoke cum Nayland. To distinguish it from other
 " villages of the same name, it is called Stoke by Nayland, formerly Stoke atte
 " Nayland.

" The Church of Stoke is dedicated to St. Mary, that of Nayland to St. James.
 " In Domesday Book 'Estimatio ecclesiæ lx mares, Estimatio vicariæ ejusdem xxxii
 " 'mares. Portio Colchester in cadem ecclesia xxs. Carnagium xxvi ob.'

" In Domesday Book the quantity of glebe land or minister's ground is stated to
 " be 60 acres, with one large church."

The vicarage of Stoke Nayland formerly had a portion of tithes in the parish of Bagthorp in Norfolk, valued at 6 marks.

" To the vicarage heretofore, belonged a fair and stately vicarage house, built of " timber, wherein have been at one time lodged two Dukes, two Earls, and their " Dutchesses and Countesses. It was alienated from the Church in the reign of
 " Edward VI. by an irreligious and unconscionable composition between the Bishop

" Patron and Incumbent, and instead thereof was allotted to the vicar a little house in the street near the Church. T. Suffolk M.S.S. Revd. T. Talbot."

In the list of deeds in Gifford's Hall, this exchange is thus spoken of, under the dates 36 of Henry VIII., and 3rd and 5th of Henry VI.:—

" 36 Hen. VIII. John Foster releases to Thomas Thorowgood for the Parsonage Church and Manor of Stoke and the Vicarage House with all the appurtenances bought of Henry VIII. at the dissolution of the Abbey of Prittlewell, Essex.

" 3rd Edward VI., 1550. The purchase of the Vicarage House and Garden of Stoke from Ths. Thorowgood and Ths. Ruddock, with the consent and will of the Bishop of Norwich.

" 5th, 1552. Ths. Thorowgood conveys the Parsonage, Church, and Manor of Stoke, with the Vicarage House, to Ths. Wiseman. A license from the Crown to alienate from Ths. Thorowgood to Ths. Wiseman the Parsonage, Church, and Manor of Stoke."

TENDRING MANOR.

The following is a list of the Lords of this Manor, given by Davy in his "Suffolk Collectanea."

" In the time of Edward the Confessor	...	Rodbert.
" In the reign of William the Conqueror	...	Swayne of Essex.
		{ Robert de Essex, son and heir.
		{ Henry de Essex, son and heir.
" In the following reigns :—
" 2 Henry II., 1190	The estate was forfeited.
" 10 Edward I., 1285	William de Tendring had free warren.
" 31 Edward I., 1303	William de Tendring and Beatrice his wife had a grant for a market and fair here.
" 33 Edward I., 1305	Sir John Tendring, son and heir.
" 49 Edward III., 1375	Sir William Tendring, son and heir.

" The name of Tendring is a very old one in connection with this parish. Among the Mannock family deeds, the names of William and John de Tendring occur as witnesses in the reign of Henry III., 1216–1272. William and John would seem therefore to have been either the ancestors, or of the same generation as the William de Tendring, who stands first of that name in the list of the Lords of the Manor given above. In a later deed of the reign of Edward I. (1272–1307), Henry, son of John Pylot de Prittlewell, Essex, gives to William de Tendring, Beatrice his wife, and Richard their son, the homage and service of Alicia, formerly the wife of Robert, the son of George de Tendring, and their heirs, with 4 marks of yearly rent which she owed to John Pylot his brother, for a house in Stoke Nayland." We learn also from the State papers that this William de Tendring had a free warren in Polstead and Boxford.

The last of the name in the list of Lords of the Manor, Sir William de Tendring, married Catherine, daughter of Sir William Mylde of Clare, the widow of Sir Thomas de Cloptone of Kentwell Hall, Melford. The portrait of her, facing this page, was taken from the east window of Melford Church, placed there in 1490 by her son, Sir John de Cloptone. The copy was made by the late R. Almack, Esq.

The following is an extract from her will :—

The will of Katherine de Tendering from Harleian Charters 56 H. 37.

It begins with her testimonium, making profession of her faith, and the usual bequests to neighbouring churches. Then follows the "Ultima Voluntas." The whole document is very long. I extract the following portion, date 24th February, A.D. 1403 :—

" Item, Willielmo filio meo unam peciam argenti sive covercle cum sex coclearibus

Grass of Sir William de Cendering, A.D. 1408.

Katherine Wynde, Wife of Sir Thomas Clogston, A.D.

“ argenti, unum lectum de albo worsted steyned cum viris et fæminis, unum lectum
 “ viridem videlicet coverlyt et tester unum matras bluet, unam mappam de Parys cum “ uno longo towayle de eodem artificio, unum vestimentum viride pro capellano cum uno “ calice, et cum missali, et unum librum vocatum Byble.

“ Item volo quod decem libræ liberentur ad reparationem Ecclesiæ de Stoke “ Neylond, et pro una petra pro sepultura mea cooperienda quinque marcæ.

“ Item volo quod triginta pauperes homines in villa de Stoke Neylond prædicta, “ Melford, et aliis villis habeant die sepulturæ meæ quilibet eorum quatuor virg. panni
 “ pro gownes dicto die inde habend^d, et quilibet eorum habeat pro factura earundem
 “ sex denarios.”

From the testamentum, the following :—

“ Item lego viginti pauperibus magis egenis in villa Stoke Neylond xxs., cuilibet “ eorum xiid., statim post obitum meum distribuendos.”

For the benefit of some of my readers I add a translation.

“ I also bequeath to my son William, one piece of silver or cover, with six silver “ spoons, one bed of white worsted with figures of men and women, one green bed, “ namely, a coverlid, one blue mattress, one napkin of Parys, one green vest for the “ chaplain, with one chalice, and with a missal, and one book called ‘ Byble.’

“ I also will that ten pounds be set free (set apart) for the repair of the Church of “ Stoke Neylond, and for one stone being placed over my grave, five marks.

“ I also will that thirty poor men in the village of the aforesaid Stoke Neylond, “ Melford, and other villages, may have on the day of my burial, each of them, four “ yards of cloth for gowns, to be had on the aforesaid day, and each of them sixpence “ for the making them.

“ I also bequeath to the twenty most destitute in the village of Stoke Neylond
 “ twenty shillings, to each of them twelve pence, to be distributed among them imme“ diately after my death.”

Alice, the only child of Sir William Tendring and Catherine his wife, represented as a person of great beauty, with abundance of fair golden hair, was the second wife of Sir John Howard.

We are thus introduced to the family of Howard, the most distinguished of those connected with Stoke, and destined to play a most important part in the history of this country.

FAMILY OF HOWARD.

The following is the pedigree of the family, as long as it was connected with Stoke:—

PEDIGREE.

Sr Robert Howard

" Sir Robert Howard married Margaret, eldest daughter of Thomas de Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and co-heir of Richard Fitzallen, Earl of Arundel, son of Lord John Mowbray and Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of Thomas de Brotherton, Earl of Norfolk, the fifth son of Edward I.

" By this marriage the inheritance of these great families became vested in this of the Howards. Their son John became the first Duke of Norfolk of the Howard line.

" He was twice married, first to Catherine, daughter of Lord Molines. By her he had one son, Thomas, who succeeded to the Dukedom, and four daughters, Anne, Isabel, Jane, and Margaret.

" Anne was married to	Sir John Tymperley, of Hintlesham.
" Isabel	„	to	...
" Jane	„	1st to	...
	„	2nd to	...
" Margaret	„	to	...

Sir Robert Mortimer, of Essex, Knight.
Sir J. Willoughby.
The Marquis of Berkely.
Sir John Wyndham, of Coulthorp and " Felbrig, Norfolk."

These daughters are frequently alluded to in the household book of the Duke of Norfolk.

The date of their births is uncertain. It must have been between the years 1444 and 1465.

" Catherine, the Duke's first wife, was the daughter of William Lord Molines, and of Eleanor his wife, daughter to Henry Lord Beaumont. Collins calls her Dutchess of Norfolk, which she never was, as she died many years before her husband was created Duke. She lies buried in the south part of the Church of Stoke, between the high altar and the choir, where a monument was erected for her, exhibiting the figure of a lady, habited in a hood and gown; on one side whereof are the arms of Brotherton, Gules, three lions passant guardant in pale Or; the arms of Howard, Gules, a bend between six cross crosslets, fitchy Argent, and a lion rampant, ducally crowned. Also, on the four corners are escutcheons of arms; on the right, next her head, four coats within a garter, circumscribed 'Honi soit qvi mal y pense.' 1, the arms of Brotherton; 2, Howard; 3, Warren, chequy, Or and Azure; 4, Mowbray, Gules, a lion rampant Argent; on the sinister side, six coats, impaling, wavy of six (the arms of Molines), 1, Brotherton; 2, Howard; 3, Warren; 4, Brews, of Gower, Azure, a lion rampant, semi of cross crosslets, Or; 5, a lion rampant, ducally crowned; 6, Mowbray. At her feet an impalement of the arms of Molines, on the right and on the sinister sides six coats, Brotherton, &c., as before. Collins gives the date of her death 1451, Hankyn, 1456.

Neither of the dates is correct. From the following document, found among the Paston letters, in the possession of G. R. Frere, Esq., Roydon, Norfolk, it appears that this first wife of Sir John Howard died in the 5th year of Edward IV., 1465. Very large sums were lavished on her funeral:—

" This wrytenge made at Stoke Naylond the vth yere of Kinge

Sir John Howard did not long remain a widower. The following year he married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Chedworth, the widow of Sir John Norreys, of Bray, in Berkshire.

The marriage presents were numerous and costly.

(The last item is in the writing of Sir John Howard.)

Margaret, this second wife of Sir John Howard, had by her first husband, Sir John Norreys, a daughter Joanna, married to Mr. William Radmeld, the inscription on whose tombstone has already been given in Hankeyn's account of the brasses and monuments in his day.

By this second marriage with Sir John Howard she had one son, William, Lord Effingham Howard, and a daughter Catherine, the wife of John Bouchier, Lord Berners.

In her will, dated May 13th, 1490, she orders her body to be buried in the choir of the Church of our Lady in Stoke Nayland, before her image, on the side of the high altar. She bequeaths to the reparation of the Church of Stoke, 5 marks; to the guild of St. John in Stoke 20s. to keep her obiit and to pray for her; 26s. 8d. to the house of St. John, Colchester; the like sum to the nuns of Brosyard and friars of Clare; 20s. to the house of St. Botolph, Colchester, and the like sum to the grey friars and to the friars of Sudbury, who were every one of them to keep her obiit and to pray for her. She directs that two virtuous priests shall sing in the Church of Stoke for her and the soul of 'my husband, John Norreys.'

The pedigree of this noble and illustrious family, found in Collins' Peerage, gives no insight into the domestic habits and proceedings of a great establishment, and yet these should not be overlooked by the historian, if he would faithfully describe the times which he chronicles. "Madame," said Lord Macaulay to a lady (who told him that she kept a careful journal of the proceedings of her household), "you have bequeathed "a valuable legacy to the future historian." Such legacies, imperfect indeed, have come down to our day, relating to the Howards when residing at Tendring.

Besides the household or steward's book in the possession of the late Sir Thomas Philips, there are two others which throw much light on the domestic affairs of the three first Dukes of Norfolk.

One is "The household book of John, Duke of Norfolk, and Thomas, Earl of Surrey, temp. 1481-1489, in the library of the Society of Antiquaries." The other, the entries of the steward from 1512 to 1524, referred to by Dr. Nott in his "Lives of the poets Surrey and Wyatt." The former of these two alone is perfect.

Sir John Howard was distinguished in the wars with France and Scotland in the reigns of Henry VI. and Edward IV. In an unsuccessful engagement with the French, in Charlton, in 1454, he was taken prisoner together with his father-in-law, Lord Molines, and detained a prisoner in France more than seven years. In 1461, Edward IV. made him constable of the castle of Norwich, and sheriff of the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, and granted him several manors in Suffolk and Essex. In the 2nd year of the reign of this king he was placed at the head of 10,000 men to keep the sea, and in 1470 was made captain of all the king's forces at sea, and in the following year Deputy-Governor of Calais. In 1481 the king engaged him as his lieutenant in his voyage to Scotland with 3,000 landsmen and marines, the Duke of Gloucester being at the head of the expedition with 23,000 men.

From the household book, 1481-1489, we learn that the naval portion of the force sent to Scotland, of which Sir John Howard was Lieutenant, left Harwich, May, 1481, and that he returned to Stoke in the August of the same year.

The accountant of the estate had not ascertained the expenditure of her ladyship during this absence from May to August. After going up to London, Sir John had an interview with Edward IV., and returned to Stoke September 14th, taking much interest in domestic and agricultural pursuits. At the end of the month he revisited London with his lady, was at the Court at Greenwich, and registered with his own hands certain presents he made to the Lord Chamberlain, the Bishop of Ely, and the Lord Mayor. The Christmas of 1481 he spent at Colchester, of the castle of which he was constable. He returned to Tendring 10th January, 1482, and attended 3 days' sessions at Ipswich. On the 31st of January he presented Lord Hastings with a pipe of wine, and 14 days after he gave the Queen's mother $3\frac{1}{2}$ yards of white russett that cost $10\frac{1}{2}$ crowns. On the 15th of February he gave the Duke of Gloucester 8 cross-bows and one of steel. He came back to Stoke the 23rd of February, and was again absent from the Hall until the beginning of May, leaving Lady Margaret at Tendring. He was soon off again to London which he reached in one day. He left London on the 20th of May, and reached Stoke on the 24th. On the 2nd of August he set off again for London which he reached on the 4th, leaving Lady Margaret at the Hall. He was going to and from Court until Christmas 1482.

He was present at the election of Knights for the Shire in Ipswich, 1483, and on the 19th of January he rode to London with 30 horsemen, was home by 1st of March, and again in London the 9th of April, the day of Edward the IVth's death. Lady Margaret joined him in London between 21st of April and 1st of May. On the 15th of May he gave the Protector a gold cup and cover—'a coope of goolde and a cover 'weigenge lxx unces of goolde.' On the 17th May, 1483, he was created Duke of Norfolk, paying £3 for the patent of Dukedom, 18s. 3d. for the sealship of Norfolk. He had also a grant made to him of the Dutchy of Cornwall. As constable of the tower it would be his business to prepare for the reception of the two young Princes, and under the date of May 4th there are notices of money expended for the repairs of beds, and especially for the "making of 3 beds." The next entry is for the cost of 2 sacks of lime. This, in connection with the memoranda relating to the beds, is remarkable. On the 5th of June a sum of money was paid for Lady Margaret to witness the procession in the city for the election of Richard III. On the Duke's way back to Stoke he was attended by 130 horsemen, for whose provision he paid at Brentwood, Chelmsford, and Colchester. About this time he went into mourning (was it for the young princes?). About this time also he made a progress through Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex, was entertained by the Priors of Bury and Thetford, and afterwards visited Surrey and Sussex. The particulars of the household expenses end November, 1483.

In 12th February, 1484, the Duke made an indenture with the King to supply him with 1,000 men, the body of men which were at Bosworth, consisting of servants and adherents of the Duke. He was made by the King Earl Marshal and Lord High Admiral of England and Aquitania. He had manors granted him in Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, Hertfordshire, Cambridgeshire, Dorsetshire, Cornwall, Somersetshire, and Wiltshire. He filled these high places and enjoyed their numerous estates for a brief period, falling August 22nd, 1485, in the Battle of Bosworth Field with the King, of whom he was one of the few faithful adherents.

The passage in the play of Richard III., where he shows the King the warning placed in his tent the night before the engagement, is well known:—

'Jocky of Norfolk, be not so bold,
For Dickon, thy master, is bought and sold.'

His body was brought to Framlingham and buried there.

As the household book already referred to gives a detailed account of the proceedings and expenditure of a large and noble family, and of the cost of labour and provisions of that period, more extracts from it may be acceptable:—

"In the Christmas of 1482, Lord John gave an entertainment at Tendryng, which "seems to have consisted of dumb show and dancing called 'Disgysyngs.'

" 10th Jenever, to a mynstrell Mastr. Woods, xxd. It^m ye same daye to

The Drama was also encouraged, as mention is made of the Actors in Thoryngton Street, Coggeshall, Chelmsford, Hadleigh, and Chesterford.

Many entries are made in connection with church music and musical performances. In the private chapel at the Hall, in which was an organ, were three men and six children of the chapel, all provided with food, clothing, and pay, and placed under the care of a Priest " Sir Wm. ye Prist for bordyn the children."

Before Lord Howard was raised to the Dukedom he maintained two Chaplains. In his establishment were an Auditor, a Steward, a Controller, and a Treasurer. Two fools also formed part of it. "Tom" is frequently alluded to in this capacity. After his elevation to the Dukedom, the household expenses were much increased. He had then a private Secretary. Nicolas and Oliver were over the Buttery. George was Clerk of the Kitchen. Lawrence, Groom of the Hall. The Duke paid away wages to 65 men-servants. The maid-servants were paid by the Duchess.

The Duke's private charities were numerous and large. He made grants of money to hermits or recluses, and maintained and educated boys at Cambridge.

In 1482 Lord Howard let a house in Cheapside, a grocer's shop, for £4 6s. 8d. a year, to a tenant whose name was Sandys.

The second Duke of Norfolk was born in 1444.

I quote from the household book :—

" In his younger age, after he had been a sufficient time at the gramer school he " was henchman to Edward IV.

" In 1466, 13 May, my master payd to Combton for a dagger for master Thomas ijs.

In the reign of Edward IV. he filled the office of Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk, and commanded the archers at the battle of Bosworth Field.

After the death of his father at Bosworth, he was attainted of treason, but after an imprisonment of three years was released by order of Henry VIJth, and made one of the Privy Council as a person of great gravity, prudence, and constancy. He came to reside at Tendring soon after his release, as appears from the following extracts from second part of the household book.

It was not until after the battle of Flodden Field,† September 3rd, 1513, at which he commanded the English army, and his eldest son led the van, that he was raised to the Dukedom. He had then thirty manors given to him.

† Among the Paston letters I find this memorandum relating to Flodden Field :—

From a deed made by Henry, Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal of England, 1582, it appears that the gold ring adorned with a Turkey stone, as also the sword and dagger taken from King James ye IVth at Flodden Field, were presented to the Herald's Office by Henry, Duke of Norfolk, on condition that the heirs and successors might at any time have them, being desirous of seeing them, on condition that they should be delivered up within a certain time.

This Duke was married twice. His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Frederick Tilney, of Ashwell, Norfolk, Knight; his second, Agnes, daughter of Hugh Tilney, sister of Sir Phillip Tilney, Knight.

By his second marriage he had eight sons and two daughters. Thomas, who succeeded to the title; 2, Lord John Edward, drowned at sea; 3, Lord Edmund (father of Catherine Howard), who resided at Stoke after the death of his father in 1524. The remaining five sons, John, Henry, Charles, Henry, and Richard, died without issue. Of the daughters Lady Muriel was married to Viscount Lisle, and Lady Elizabeth to Thomas Viscount Rochford, the father of Anne Boleyn, so that Catherine Howard and Anne Boleyn, two Queens of England, were first cousins, and probably resided, at least were visitors, at Tendring Hall. Closely connected then with the royal family was this 2nd Duke. Through the Mowbray branch he was descended from Edward I. He was grandfather to two Queens, and great grandfather to Queen Elizabeth.

From the year 1490 to the time of his death, I cannot discover whether he paid more than occasional visits to Tendring, where his son and heir, the Earl of Surrey, resided from the year 1513 to 1524. This appears from another household book formerly in the possession of G. R. Frere, Esq., Norfolk, containing an exact account of the expenses of the Earl of Surrey's household, from his going to live at Tendring Hall in 1513 to the time of his father's death in 1524. From this book, which Dr. Nott in his "Lives of the poets Surrey and Wyatt" examined and made extracts from in 1815, we find that the Earl of Surrey was frequently absent from home on public business, and the Countess occasionally away during her attendance at Court, and that the children were always at home. During the whole of the above-mentioned period, there is an uninterrupted record of dinners provided for my Lord Henry (the poet) in the nursery. This book contains also an exact account of every breakfast, dinner, and supper throughout the year. The provisions of every course at every table, the name of every visitor at each table, the name of every stranger present, and the quantity of victuals provided each day, are entered. At the end of each week is an account of the price of every article of provision, including that of beer, with the total of the weekly expenditure, and of the remainder in hand.

The Countess ate fish only on Wednesdays throughout the year. On Friday the whole family did the same. On Mondays, Tuesdays, and Wednesdays, in Rogation week, no breakfast or supper was provided, except for my Lord Henry in the nursery. On some other occasions also no supper was provided.

When my lord and lady were both at home, their table or service was prepared in my lord's chamber, when my lady only was at home, in my lady's chamber; and when both were absent, in the nursery for my Lord Henry. On the 5th day of September, when there was company, and my Lady Essex dined, and on the 3rd of January, when my Lord the Marquis of Dorset was present, the dinner was served up in the great chamber or dining room.

The number of persons that usually dined at my lord and lady's table, exclusive of strangers, was from 15 to 20.

The household service was in the hall, where the gentlemen, yeomen, and grooms were served. Their messes were made up from 3 to 8 persons. At Christmas from 12 to 15. The mess kept in the kitchen was called the cooks' mess. There were, besides, messes held in the brewhouse, bakehouse, and porter's lodge. The dinner hour was 10 A.M.; the supper hour 5 P.M.

The following names occur as visitors :—

“ The Duke of Norfolk and Agnes his wife, the Lady Elizabeth, afterward married to Radcliffe, Earl of Sussex, Anne, Lady Oxford, his daughter, my young lady, probably Lady Dorothy, afterwards Lady Stanley, Lord Thomas, the duke's second son by his second wife, who died in 1539 in the Tower, Mr. Spurge, whom Dr. Nott conjectures to have been Spring, a family of great wealth, who, conjointly with Lord Oxford, built the church and tower of Lavenham, Lord Essex, Lord Bouchier, Lady Percy, and Lady Bryant or Brian (created such on her appointment as governess to the Princesses Mary and Elizabeth), Sir Henry Gray, Lady Morley, Mrs. Parker, my Lord of Kent, Thomas Fitzallen, Earl of Arundel, John Timperley of Hintlesham, and Anne his wife, sister of the Duke (called Lady Timperley, after her father was raised to the Dukedom), Lady Marney, Lady Vere, wife of Sir J. Vere, old Lady Oxford, Thomas Redmyng or Redmyn, and his bride Margaret, daughter of the Duchess, the second wife of the Duke, by her first husband, Sir John Norreys of Bray. Sir Thomas Tage and his Lady, Lady Wyndham and her husband, Sir John Wyndham of Coulthorp, Mr. Southwell, Lord William, the Duke's eldest son (by his second wife), afterwards Earl of Effingham, Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, my Lord Marquis of Dorset, Lord Fitzwalter, Lady Rice, Lady Catherine, half sister of the Earl of Surrey, married to Rue Griffith, Mr. Serjeant Wentworth.”

These visitors had many servants called gentlemen in their suit. Mr. Spurge brought two with him, Mr. Butler five, Messrs. Steward, Wilson, Holdich, Chase, Southwell, two each. Lady Morley, six gentlemen and three servants, Mrs. or Lady Timperley four. The gentlewomen appear to have dined with their ladies at the ladies' table, the gentlemen in the hall.

Priests were often entertained at the hall, and monks from the neighbouring monasteries. Sir Richard, the parish priest, is mentioned, and a monk and a hermit from Cocksall (Cogeshall).

On one occasion gypsions or gipsies were entertained. At Christmas the household was very large, there being 12, 14, 16 messes in the hall, containing sometimes 60, sometimes 70 persons and upwards. The Duke's servants, when he came from Keninghall or Framlingham to Tendring, seem to have lodged in the village, as venison pasties were sent to them there from the hall. Probably it was at this time the use was made of the vicarage house.

The extracts which follow, containing the services of one day, will show the manner in which the family lived :—

Breakfast.

- “ To the Grace the Duke of Norfolk, a boiled capon and a piece of beef.
- “ To my Lord — Howard, a breast of mutton and a chicken.
- “ To her Grace the Dutchess of Norfolk, a boiled capon and a piece of beef.
- “ To Lady Oxford, a boiled mutton and a piece of beef.

- “ Second Course.—4 messes of mortis, 6 chickens, 8 pigeons, 3 conies, 2 shoveless, 4 sepyes, 1 doz. quails, 2 pasties of venison, a tart, nuts and pears.
- “ Strangers present.—Duke and Dutchess of Norfolk, Lady Oxford, Lady Elizabeth, and Lady Wyndham.

To the Board's End.

- “ First Course.—A capon boiled, 2 ribs of beef, a swan, 4 chevets, a breast of veal, a capon roast, a custard.
- “ Second Course.—4 messes, a boiled capon, beef, roast veal, a pie, a custard.—For 16 gentlemen.

Supper.

- “ First Course.—A neck of mutton boiled, 2 slices of beef, calves' feet and shoulder, breast of mutton, and a capon.
- “ In my lady's chamber one mess, 20 persons, with my lady and the strangers.”

On the death of the 2nd Duke, in 1524, Thomas Howard, now succeeding to the title, gave up Tendring Hall to his brother, Lord Edmund Howard, and went to reside at Framlingham. This 3rd Duke's first wife was Anne Plantagenet, third daughter of Edward IV., by whom he had no children who came to manhood. By his second wife Elizabeth Stafford, eldest daughter of the Duke of Buckingham, he had two sons, Henry Howard the Poet, and Lord Thomas Howard, and one daughter, married to Henry Fitzroy, Duke of Richmond, natural son of Henry the VIII. The general opinion is that Henry the Poet was educated at Windsor with his future brother-in-law the Duke of Richmond; that he spent some of his youthful years with him is certain, but this must have been at a later period, when these two accomplished noblemen began to take part in the more active pursuits of life. The household book says that the early years of the Poet's life were spent at Tendring Hall, and at Hunsdon in Hertfordshire. We learn from that book that his father passed the spring and summer months at Tendring Hall, and removed 29th October to Hunsdon, which he made his winter residence. Thirteen carters were employed in conveying the furniture and hangings from Stoke to Hunsdon. Dr. Nott says that the Earl of Surrey probably acquired his taste for poetry among the oaks of Tendring. Lord Edmund Howard (his brother) married Joyce, daughter of Sir Richard Culpepper, of Holyburn, Kent, by whom he had Catherine Howard, the unhappy Queen of Henry VIII.; the date of her birth must have been 1521. Lord Edmund died March 19th, in the 30th year of the reign of Henry VIII. Miss Strickland, in her "Lives of the Queens of England," says that after 1524 Lord Edmund permitted the Dowager Duchess Agnes to take charge of Catherine Howard at Framlingham, where she formed an intimacy with one Manox.

The 3rd Duke, as Earl of Surrey, had filled high and important places in his father's life-time. After his death he was made Lord High Admiral and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. During the greater part of the reign of Henry VIII. fresh honours were heaped upon him. In the 33rd of his reign he was appointed Captain-General of the armies of England and France, and was enriched with a grant of at least 100 manors. His remarkable success and the honours and lands heaped upon him drew upon him the envy of many, and the jealousy of the King himself. An obscure hint of treasonable designs said to be entertained by him and his son Henry, the Earl of Surrey, and subsequent charges brought against him and his son by his own wife from whom he was divorced, and by his daughter Mary, the Duchess of Richmond, led to their apprehension. They were tried and condemned to death. The sentence was carried out against the son. Thus fell in the prime of life this nobleman, so distinguished as a poet and a soldier, of whom Pope, in his "Windsor Forest" writes:—

" Matchless his pen, victorious was his lance,
" Bold in the lists, and graceful in the dance."

His father escaped; Henry VIII. dying the same day on which his execution was to have taken place. He remained in prison during the reign of Edward VI.; on the accession of Queen Mary, in 1553, he was released, his title and lands were restored to him, and in 1554 he commanded the Queen's troops, and put down the insurrection of Sir T. Wyatt; he died the same year at an advanced age at Keninghall, having seen the reigns of eight English Sovereigns, Henry VI., Edward IV., Edward V., Richard III., Henry VII., Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Queen Mary.

The 4th Duke, eldest son of the Earl of Surrey, the Poet, at the age of 18 succeeded to the title and many possessions of his grandfather, and also filled high and important places in the State. On the accession of Queen Elizabeth, he also basked in the Royal favour. He was invested by the Queen with the Order of the Garter; commanded the troops sent to expel the French from Scotland; was appointed Lieutenant-General of the Forces in the North; and in 1568 was commissioned, with other noblemen of distinction, to examine the charges brought against Mary, Queen of Scotland, and the claim of the Infant King James ; but the following year he was charged with seeking, without the cognizance of his Royal Mistress, the hand of Mary, and the Crown of Scotland. In vain he pleaded in his defence that he had no temptation to aspire to the Crown of Scotland, as his estates in England were worth the whole of that Kingdom. He was beheaded June 2, 1572, in the 36th year of his age.

The title was then lost, and the estates forfeited to the Crown, and the heir, less than 10 years of age, was, with his brothers and sisters, reduced to a state of absolute want, instead of succeeding to an inheritance of the largest real and personal estate of any subject in the Kingdom.

Not more rapid was the rise of this family than their fall. The first Duke was killed on Bosworth Field. The third was condemned to death. Two Queens, his granddaughters, his eldest son, and his grandson, all fell on the scaffold. The estates were then forfeited, and the family reduced to the greatest distress.

From the circumstances of a grant of the forfeited manor of Tendring being made by the Crown in 1563 to Sir Thomas Rivett, Knt., of Chippenham, Cambridgeshire, it would appear that Tendring was not included in the manors restored to the Howards by the Queens Mary and Elizabeth.

Sir T. Rivett married Grisilda, youngest daughter of Lord William Paget, of Bendesert, Staffordshire, by whom he had one daughter, Anna.

His widow Grisilda was married a second time to Sir William Waldegrave.

Anna, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Thomas Rivett, was married to Henry, Lord Windsor, who died in 1605. She survived him 10 years, dying in 1615. Their son, Thomas, Lord Windsor, after the death of his mother, sold the estate to Thomas Williams, Esq., in whose family it remained up to the time of Sir John William, Knt., Lord Mayor of London. From him it came into the possession of Sir Wm. Rowley, K.B., the ancestor of the present family. The only part of the ancient hall now left is a stack of chimneys or turret standing in the garden which mark its site.

The brasses are also left in the south chapel of the chancel connected with this manor, one of Sir William Tendring, of which a plate is given, copied from the one in the "Architectural Notes of the Churches in Suffolk," another of Catherine, first wife of the first Duke of Norfolk, taken from a rubbing (the copy in "Weaver" is not correct), and a third that of a lady, name unknown.

In the south chapel of the chancel is also raised a large and elaborate monument to the memory of Lady Anne Windsor. It is enclosed with iron palisades, and consists of a table about four-feet and a half high, in which lies, at length and of the natural size, the figure of a woman in a black dress with a large hoop, and over it a mantle of scarlet lined with fur. On her head is a cap with lappets hanging down on each side of the face, and adorned in the front with roses. Round her neck is a ruff, and the head rests on two cushions. At her head are two female figures, probably intended for her daughters, kneeling, with large ruffs extending far behind, their petticoats distended with large hoops, their hair much frizzled, and a small cap or coif placed on the hind part of their heads. At the feet is her son kneeling on his left knee, and facing north (the daughters face east) in boots and puffed breeches. On his breast is a cuirass, and over it a mantle; his left hand on the hilt of his sword. On his left side, not fixed on the table, stands his helmet, on which is a large and spreading plume of feathers. On the north face of the table are three compartments of black marble. The two end ones are smallest and blank. On the centre one is this inscription in gold letters and capitals:—

“ Hic tumultata jacet pia, provida, pulchra, pudica,
 “ Religiosa Deo fœmina, fida viro.
 “ Indulgens proli, miserisque tenerrima mater
 “ Ut quibus et moriens hospita tecta dedit.

On the wall over the figures are two compartments with pilasters. On the eastern one is this inscription:—

THE MANOR OF GIFFORD'S HALL.

In 1216 this manor was held by Richard Constable. He built the chapel, now in ruins, close by his house; it was dedicated to St. Nicholas, and was amply endowed by his son, William Constable. Gifford or Giffard's Hall seems to have come into the possession of Peter Giffard in the reign of Henry III. It is doubtful whether he or Richard Constable, who built the Chapel of St. Nicholas, built the older part of the present mansion, the hall with its fine oak roof and the butteries—these are of an earlier date than the entrance tower; this, which is of brick, with the mouldings of the windows, the doors, and the arch-way, are of the Tudor age, and must have been built by the Mannocks.

There is a list of deeds in the archives of Gifford's Hall, from which, by the kindness and courtesy of the present owner, Walter Mannock Strickland Mannock, Esq., I am permitted to make some extracts.

The notices in these MSS. extend from the beginning of the 13th to the middle of the 18th century. They contain no allusion to the civil war between the houses of York and Lancaster. The isolated position of the eastern counties, their remoteness, at least, from those parts of England in which the contest was going on, may account for this silence.

In the reign of Henry III. the Chapel of St. Nicholas, close to the Hall, now in ruins, was built by Richard Constable, and endowed by his son and others.

" William Constable grants to this chappell of St. Nicolas, to the Rev^d Mr. Adams, " of Polstead, so long as he lives, and to his successors, various pieces of land and a mill.

" William Constable gives to this chapell of St. Nicolas and to the Rev^d Mr. Robert, " chaplain, of Withermarsh, certain lands with a mill.

" Bartholomew Donè de Withermarsh gives to God and the chapell of William " Constable the chaplain's house and land and garden.

" Robert de Pand gives to God and the chapell of William Constable and the " chaplain a piece of land in Church Field holden of him by Hugo Blakenger.

" Henry, the son of Bartholomew, gives to God and the chapell of William " Constable and the chaplain, an acre of ground in a field called 'Jack Dene' adjoining " the lands of William Constable.

" Henry, son of Robert Gerard, gives to God and the Chapell of St. Nicolas, for " his soul and that of Avelina his wife, certain lands and marshes."

The following names occur as witnesses in various deeds and leases in this reign :—

" Hugo de Polsted, Adam, son of William Martin de Polsted, Walter Constable, " Gualfride de Neyland, Gualfride de Melford, J^o de Peytune, George Burel, Jn^o de " Tendring, Robert de le Pand, Hugo Blakenger, Robert Camerarius, Gerard Constable, " John Bartholomew, Gregory, son of Rudulph, Robert Bassit, Henry Tovemy, Peter " Giffard, Rich^d Norris, Lucas de Higham, Godfrid de Birfield.

" Elizabeth, 1558–1603, 2.—Th^s Wiseman, of Roughley, Sussex, conveys to Robert Bell, of the Middle Temple, all the parsonage, rectory, church, and manor of Stoke Nayland, for the sum of one thousand pounds. This is followed by another deed which is the release to the said Robert Bell from the above."

Now begin the losses and persecutions which this family had to suffer as recusants, as refusing to conform to the Church of England as by law established. The apology for the Penal laws may be that they were defensive. The plots formed against Elizabeth, the Spanish invasion, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, all concurred to make the Parliament treat with rigour those, who from their religious convictions and impressions might consider the Pope's authority paramount, and therefore might be suspected, however unreasonably and unjustly, of sympathy and correspondence with the enemies of England.

" In 1596, Queen Elizabeth lets to Rich^d Croft, gentleman, two-thirds of the estates in the possession of William Mannock, for recusancy for not going to church.

" In 1602, King James Ist, in the first year of his reign, grants a general pardon of all crimes, and forfeits to the aforesaid W. Mannock, and in the 7th year of his reign lets to Will^m Tyffin, Esqr., of Colne, 2 parts of the Mannock estates forfeited for recusancy.

" In the 10th year of James Ist the King grants to W^m Alston a lease of two-thirds of the estate of Francis Mannock, seized for recusancy.

* From this will it appears that he held lands and tenements in Stoke, with a piece of land situate at Snowdons, called Rowncroft. His executors were Alicia his wife, and John Wigan or Weggen. Among other legacies he bequeaths to his son Walter, unam togam blodiam.

" The same Will. Alston leaves the same to Th^s Benner, who leaves the same to Edward Norton.

" 1625.—Charles 1st grants to Francis Mannock a general pardon for all misdemeanours, forfeitures, &c.

" 1627.—Francis Mannock is created a Baronet of Great Britain by Letters Patent of the King, and the same year an inquisition is ordered to be taken of his estate for recusancy.

" 1634.—Sir Francis dies, and is succeeded by Sir Francis Mannock, son and heir, 2nd Bar^t. Upon his intended marriage with Mary, the daughter of Sir G. Heneage, Bar^t, settles his estates. His estates being under sequestration, Sir G. Heneage enters upon part of it, to raise money for the younger children's portion.

" 1650.—A decree of the Committee of the House of Parliament is made for levying the sequestration, and ordering the judgments of the visitation of Sir G. Heneage for provision for the children, with orders to bring them up in the Protestant religion.

" 1658.—Richard the Protector grants a release of the estate, sequestered for recusancy to R^d Waterman, of Stoke, on the payment to the Exchequer of 150 pounds yearly. Sir G. Heneage, by the payment of £1,000, releases the estate. He dies 1659. In 1671, Sir F. Mannock makes a settlement for the marriage of his son William with Ursula Neville.

" Sir Francis Mannock, 1st Bar^t, died 1634.

" Sir Francis Mannock, 2nd Bar^t, died 1686.

" Sir William Mannock, 3rd Bar^t, died 1713.

" Sir Francis Mannock, 4th Bar^t, died 1758.

" Sir William Mannock, 5th Bar^t, died 1764.

" Sir William Mannock, 6th Bar^t, died 1776.

" Sir Francis Mannock, 7th Bar^t, died 1778.

" Sir Thomas Mannock, 8th Bar^t, died 1781.

" Sir George Mannock, 9th Bar^t, died 1787.

" Sir George Mannock was killed by the overturning of the mail coach on his way to Rome to resign his priestly orders. After his death Gifford's Hall was occupied by the widows of Sir Francis and Sir Thomas Mannock, and it was not until the year 1814 that William Valentine Cummyns, to whom the estate was bequeathed by Lady Elizabeth, the widow of Sir Francis Mannock, came into residence. He took the name of Mannock, and died in 1819; and was succeeded by Patrick Power, Esqr., who also inherited by the will of the said Lady Elizabeth, and took the name of Mannock. He died 1874, and was succeeded by his son, Walter Mannock Strickland Mannock, the present proprietor."

The following are the Monuments of the Mannock family now existing in Stoke Church :—

The monument which blocks up one of the windows of the North Chapel has a

TOMB OF SIR FRANCIS MANNOCK.

recumbent figure of Sir Francis Mannock, finely executed in alabaster, with this inscription on the wall above :—

“ In pious and deserved memory of Francis Mannock, Baronet, whose ancestors “ long since derived from Denmark, and in England called Lords of Mannock’s Manor,
 “ now called Great Gravensden, in the countie of Huntingdon, the still continued “ inheritance of their families, have also for many ages been Lords and inhabitants of “ this manor of Gifford’s Hall, in this Parish. Whose religious conversation made him “ revered of all, whose candour of mind, sweetness of manner, and generous hospitality,
 “ made his life loved and honoured by the rich, whose bountiful charitie made his death “ lamented by the poor.

“ ‘Sunt optanda magis puræ bona nomina vitæ

“ ‘Nobilis unguenti quam pretiosus odor.’ Eccles vii, 1.”

Another brass has this inscription :—

“ Hic jacet Franciscus Manok Armiger, duas qui habuit uxores, ex priore quidem

LADY ALICIA HOWARD.

PARISH REGISTERS AND OVERSEERS' BOOKS.

Although Thomas Lord Cromwell, in the year 1538, ordered Parochial Registers to be kept, the order seems very rarely to have been enforced. The registers of baptisms, marriages, and deaths, in the parish of Stoke begin only in the first year of Queen Elizabeth, 1558. From that time they are continued, with an interruption only of the entries of baptisms, in the days of the Commonwealth, up to the time when the new registers were ordered, and are contained in seven volumes.

The first, which dates from 1558 to 1644, is a transcript from the original, which no longer exists.

"Quæ hoc libro continentur usque annū 1600 ex chartaceo prototypo fideliter transcripsit atque hinc regessit Gulielmus Tailerus, ab aliquot quibus scatuere perspicuis mendis purgata." (Preface.)

In this volume are a few entries worthy of notice.

BURIALS.

"1600.—14 Maie, was buried John Gardiner Turner, aged 116."

Over this entry, in which are traces of an erasure, is written the hexameter.—

"Ut perhibent qui de magnis majora loquuntur."

And this note—"Rasura hæc detegit mendam et ψευδογραφίαν. Vide baptizatos."

At the commencement of the entries of the "Baptizati," Anno Domini 1600, is written—"Et hic in aliquot et quibusdam hoc mense sepultis inserendis erratum erat de loco, prout ex palimpsesto utrinque constat."

From 1582 to 1601, the ages of the buried are given, except of young children, and from these entries I infer that the average duration of life during these 19 years was about 43 years.

"1603.—The sickness began about this time."

"1604.—Nov. The Plague began."

"1605.—Julie hear the mortallitie of the plague.

"Blessed be God."

"1569.—Robert Goldinge, servant to the Duke of Norfolk."

"1589.—April 19; John, Son of Right Hon^{ble} Henrie Lord Windsor."

"1603.—Dec. 2; Thomas Poulterer, servant to the Right Honble. Lord Windsor, "who by chance fell into the towne well and so was slain."

" 1579.—April 9th ; christened Thomas, son of Ralph Agas."

" 1588.—March 31st ; christened Benjamin, son of Ralph Agas."

I can discover no register of the baptism of Robert Agas, probably another son of Ralph, but there are two entries of the baptisms of two of his sons.

" 1597.—Dec. 31st ; christened William, son of Robert Agas."

" 1599.—Sept. 23rd ; christened Robert, son of Robert Agas."

The date of the birth of Ralph Agas cannot now be ascertained, as it must have taken place before the year 1558.

Ralph Agas, appears by letters addressed by him to William Lord Burghleigh, Lord High Treasurer to Queen Elizabeth, to have been a surveyor of much experience and reputation. He made one of the earliest maps of the city of London, of which a reprint has lately been published by the librarian to the Corporation of London.—Vide Civitas Londini.—Ralph Agas. "A survey of the cities of London and Westminster, &c., in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by William Henry Overall, F.S.A., Librarian to the Corporation of London ; with a fac-simile of the original map.

" London :—(ADAM AND FRANCIS, 1874.)"

In this work of much labour and research, Mr. Overall gives some curious particulars of the history of Agas.

Among the Star Chamber Papers is a Bill and Answer in a suit of Ives v. Agas. The complainant was one William Ive, of Stoke by Nayland, and the defendants were Ralph Agas, and his two sons Robert and Thomas.

" Robert Agas had married the widow of John Payne, of Stoke by Nayland, " ' a good man and true, and blessed with the possession of various manors, lands, and " ' tenements." Payne also left a daughter, Agnes, afterwards the wife of William Ive, " the plaintiff in the suit, and a son John, a minor, who resided with his sister and her " husband Ive. Family disputes arose relating to the father's property. The boy was " made a ward of Chancery, the proceeds of a portion of the land was ordered to be " paid into Court, the execution of the order being confided to the Agases. Many " disputes ensued, and in a family melée Ive was wounded in the back by a pitchfork, " and the matter was made the subject of a Bill in the Star Chamber, wherein Agas and " his sons were described as the most pestilent fellows in the neighbourhood, and Ralph " himself as one that in former tymes hath used the office of a mynister and was some- " times parson of — Dereham, in the county of Norfolk, being deprived of his " benefice for his lewd life and bad conditions, and being deformed in shape and body, " as in condition."

The defendant, in his answer, asserted that many of the allegations in the Bill were absurd, ridiculous, and untrue, "that the said Ralph Agas was never a parson of " Dereham in Norfolk, neither had anything to do with the church, parsonage, or " minister there, neither was ever deprived from any church benefice whatsoever, as is

"falsely and maliciously in the said Bill suggested and intended ; and touching the infirmity and weakness of the same Radulph Agas, he saith that as he received the same by the providence of God in his mother's wombe, so hath he always with humble thanks to his Creator willingly borne and suffered that his infirmity, and that God hath recompensed the same with many and sundry good gifts, which he hath by the goodness of the Almighty hitherto used, and shall hereafter use, to the benefit of many and the harming of none, wherein he referreth himself unto the judges of this Honorable Court, the Lords of her Highness most honourable Counsaile, by whom he hath been sundry times employed in her Majesty's causes."

Agas died in November, 1621. His death is thus recorded in the diary of Adam Winthrop, of Groton, the father of Governor Winthrop, of Massachusetts :—

" 1621, Nov. 26. Ralfe Agas 'the creple' died."

In Stoke Register the burial is thus entered :—

" Ann. Dni. 1621, Nov^r 27, was buried Ralfe Agas, an aged."

MARRIAGES.

" 1591.—Auguste the 22 day were married John Mills and Judith Luffky."

In the margin is written "Decipimur specie recti."

" 1645.—The 11th February was married William Gurnall, of Lavenham, singell man, minister, and Sarah Mott, of this parish, singell woman, daughter of Mr. Thomas Mott, minister."—(See Note, page 33.) Calamy, in his Memorial, Vol. I., p. 437, says of him : "Mr. Thomas Mott, ejected after the Restoration, a very valuable man."*

The 2nd volume has this preface :—

" 1653.—A register book made this 24th of November for the Parish of Stoke next Nayland for the Registers of all Marriages, Births, and Burials from the 29th of September for the yeare above written, and to be kept by the Registrar chosen by the Parish to the same purpose, who hath been sworne by two Justices of the Peace for the Countie, namely, Mr. John Gurdon, of Assington, and Mr. Joseph Brand, of Edwardstone, accordinge to the late Act in Parliament.

" The Registrar chosen for this Parish is Jacob Garrett."

In all the topographical notices of Stoke by Nayland, Sir William Capel, draper, and Lord Mayor of London, is spoken of as a native of this place. He was the ancestor of the Earls of Essex. He is said to have advanced large sums of money to Henry VII., and, after a splendid entertainment, to have thrown into the fire a number of bonds given him by the King for money borrowed of him, and still further to have displayed his loyalty by dissolving a pearl of some hundred pounds value, and drinking it to the King's health. I can trace this story to no other authority than that of Fuller:—

" Sir W. Capel is reported by tradition (since by continuance consolidated into historical truth) that after a large entertainment made for King Henry the Seventh he concluded all with a fire wherein he burnt many bonds in which the King, a borrower in the beginning of his reign, stood obliged to him (a sweet perfume no doubt to so thrifty a Prince), not to speak of his expensive frolick, when at another dinner he drank a dissolved pearl, which cost many hundred pounds, in a health to the King."—Fuller's Worthies, p. 73.

Fuller speaks of this as a traditionary story, and it must, I fear, be added to other myths, those of William Tell, of Whittington, &c., the real character of which is given in "Baring Gould's Myths of the Middle Ages." A like story of the burning of royal bonds is told of H. J. Fugger, who entertained Charles V. at a room in the "Three Moors," at Augsburg, and lit the celebrated fire of cinnamon wood in which the bonds were burnt. I can discover no trace of this story of Capel's munificence in the records of the City of London. Mr. Overall has furnished me with the following extracts from them:—

" William Capel, elected Alderman of Walbrook Ward 19th October, 1485, 1st year of Henry VII.

" Sir W. Capell was elected Sheriff on the Feast of St. Mathew the Apostle, September 21, 1493.

* From this entry it would seem that there must formerly have been a Quakers' Meeting belonging to Stoke. When I first came to the Parish, an old man told me that in working a triangular field on Leavenheath, called the Quakers' Burial Ground, he had often ploughed up coffin boards.

" Sir W. Capell, Kn^t, elected Lord Mayor on the Feast of the Translation of King Edward the Confessor, Octr. 13, 1503, the 19th of Henry VII.

" Sir W. Capell deceased 8th October, 1514, 6th year of Henry VIII."

In the State papers, Hen. VIII., 1509—1514, there are several entries relating to him. 20th April, 1509, he is especially mentioned as exempted from the pardon granted By Henry.

" 21 January, 1510, general pardon granted to Sir W. Capell, Kn^t.

" Notwithstanding his loyalty, so well attested, the King let loose his bloodhounds, Empson and Dudley, upon him, when, though they spared his life, they sucked out of him many £1,000, to fill the King's Treasury, if not their own purses. But industry in trade retrieved much of this wealth, so that he died in years and honour, leaving great estates to his posterity, who, settled in Hedham, Hertfordshire, have ever since enjoyed them. His daughter Elizabeth was married to W. Powlet, Marquis of Winchester.

" He first made cages to be set up in every ward for rogues and vagabonds."—Howe's Survey of London.

He lies buried in the chapel he himself built in the south side of St. Bartholomew Church, behind the Royal Exchange, one of the City churches, lately pulled down.

Extracts from Overseers' Book.

The household books of the Earl of Surrey have given us some insight into the state of society in the 15th century. The following extracts from two of the Overseer and Churchwarden's books, dating from 1670 to 1725, informs us how parish matters were conducted in those days, how the poor were maintained, and evil-doers were punished.

" 1670.—Churchwardens, overseers, questmen, surveyors of the highway, and searchers of cloth were appointed.*

" 1670. April.—The overseers received £120 16s. 11d. for the relief of the poor, and disbursed £117 10s. 4d.

" 1670.—The constable's account was:—Received £24 11s. 9d.; disbursed £23 9s. 5d.

" 1671. March 1.—Whereas John Preston hath lent unto Hannah Francis a loom for her use, which said loom being freely lent, and for her particular advantage, we, the inhabitants of Stoke Nayland, do declare that we will not hereafter distrain or seize the said loom in the Guild Hall, unlesse for the use of the said John Preston, under any pretence whatever.*

" 1673.—The Town Lands let for	6	0	0
" " Guild Hall	1	6	8
" " Camping Close	1	0	0
" 1673. Jan. 3.—Ordered by the parish that the churchwardens of Stoke Nayland

* See Appendix.

" do commence and prosecute a suite in the Arches against Reginald Williams, Esq.,
 " William Meddowes, Gent., John Gardiner and John Parson, or any others that doe or " shall occupy any lands belonging to Stoke Parke, or any of the quit rents belonging " to the said parish, if uppon demand made by the churchwardens above written for
 " any sum or sums of money rated by the churchwardens and the inhabitants of the
 " towne in the churchwardens' rate, they shall refuse to pay the rate for within, whereof
 " we have set to our hands."

Here follow signatures.

" 1676.—Received of John Webb and Nicholas Rand, churchwardens of Stoak
 " next Nayland, £5 6s. 11d. for the releife of the poor of Northampton.

" 1676. March 7.—Ordered at a parish meeting by the officers and chief inhabi-
 " tants of the parish then present, that no parishioner of the parish of Stoak not attending
 " every Lord's Day upon divine service from the beginning of it to the end of the whole
 " service, and not sitting in the place appointed for them, nor behave themselves
 " reverently, shall retain their pension, except that they shew reason for their default.

" 1677. Sept., Mem.—It is agreed that Edward Mumford and John Stibbing shall " be allowed out of the present constable's rate, over and above his Majestie's pay, for " their four days' work and carriage of timber, so much money as shall be reasonable
 " over and above the pay aforesaid.

" Ordered that Mr. Fotheringill should have his bill for salves, for Ffrancis Lea,
 " and other drugs.

" 1677.—It is agreed and ordered that the churchwardens from henceforward shall
 " let out all churchwork of the value of thirty shillings and upwards, to such workmen
 " as will doe it cheapest, and no work as aforesaid to be let on, until shewed to three
 " workmen at the least.

" 1677.—A rate made the 1st day of June 1677 by the assessors of the parrish of
 " Stoak next Nayland, to colect the first day of the month the taxe granted by Act of " Parliament for the building of thirty ships of war. The land taxed at twopence
 " farthing a pound.

" 1678. April.—Ordered that such as carry timber to Manniutree for the use of " his Majestie's navy the last year, shall be allowed eight shillings a day, over and above
 " his Majestie's pay, to be allowed them out of the constable's rate.

" 1678.—Ordered that William Goodwin, his rates be doubbled uppon him in regard
 " of his taking from time to time strangers in the parish, likely to be chargeable.

" 1678.—It is ordered that in case the churchwardens or one of them be present at " every communion, then to allow them for what wine should be there spent, but in " case of their wilful absence not to allow for any communion but two bottles (quarts)
 " of wine, no more.

" 1678.—Michael Beaumont, his rate on account of the charges that I have been at
 " since I was constable in the y^r 1678.

" Jan. 3.—For whipping Mary Notley and carrying her and sister out of towne, 3 shillings.

" Item, paid for whipping goodwife Agas, 6*d*.

" Item, for carrying a hewencrie (hue-and-cry) to Nayland, 3 pence.

" Item, for carrying a hewencrie to Higham, 4 pence."

There are many other entries of hewencrie, charges for "quaterings" of soldiers, and other indications of an unsettled state of the country.

The largest item in the constable's expenditure was for the lodging of travellers and carrying them to different neighbouring parishes. Many pages of the book are occupied with these details.

" 1679.—We whose names are hereunto subscribed do for our part and proportions " and respectively agree that the sum of five pounds and eleven shillings be paid unto " John Cooper, of this parrish, carpenter, out of the rate of the Constables for the time " being, in full payment of the watchhouse by him lately erected.

" 1680.—Michael Gibbs is ordered to search and take a copy of the will of the " said Lady Ann Windsor, and to prosecute any person or persons to enforce them to " pay the yearly maintenance, as it was given to the said almshouses."

This copy is still in existence in the Church chest. A transcript of it will be found in the Appendix.

In the Parish Book there are other notices of this prosecution, and we may suppose that it ended in the claim of the parish upon the land at Higham being established, as the rent has been paid punctually within living memory.

Michael Gibbs was evidently a lawyer, and according to the list of rate-payers lived at Thorington Street. In his time there seem to have been many law-suits in the parish.

" 1680. Oct. 6.—Ordered at a towne meeting that the overseers shall pay unto " Thomas Richardson, of Dedham, chyrurgeon, the sum of thirty-five shillings, and also " that they pay six shillings for a diate drink for Francis Taborne.

" 1680.—Names of those that gave to the ransoming of slaves from Angiers, and " their several sums of money.

" 1681. July 7.—Ordered at the towne meeting that the Churchwardens shall have " a rate made to gather fourpence in the pound for the repair of the Church, and a " decent cloth for the Communion Table.

" 1683.—From Churchwardens' account:—

						s. d.
" For two days' rambolation	—
" For two men to watch all night with a man	1 8
" For whipping him	0 6
" For releife in the morning...	0 5
" Hewencrie to Polstead	0 2
" Charges with a man in the stocks	1 0
" For carrying a person to Bury Goal	1 10

" In the list of rate-payers 'hopp grounds' are mentioned.

" 1684.—Ordered at a parish meeting that the ringers be paid 10*d.* a day for every " day they ring for those days hereafter mentioned, namely, His Majesty's Coronation " Day, 29th May, 5th Nov., and whatever other day they appoint for thanksgiving the " said year.

" 1686.—For warding a May Day.

" Dec. 25.—We, whose names are subscribed, being y^e major part of y^e parishioners " present at a meeting duly called and held, do chuse Charles Umfreville, Esq., Joseph " Clarke, and John Goodall, surveyors of the high waies in this parish of Stoke next " Nayland, for the year next ensuing.

(Signed) " JOS. HALL,
" THOS. MAY, etc."

Then follows in Sir Reginald Williams' large handwriting the following:—

" 1686. Dec. 25.—I protest against this choice of surveyors for the highways, " because no notice was given till about the space of three hours before the choice was " made, being given on Christmas Day in the church when few people were then " present, about the hour of twelve of the clock at three of the clock the same " day, in the afternoon.

" REG. WILLIAMS.

" Moreover, the parishioners then present were so menaced by Mr. Hall, that they " durst not chose freely, but diverse of them went out of the Church.

" REG. WILLIAMS."

In a minute handwriting at the bottom of this page we find:—

" Dec. 15, 1687.—That which is written above concerning Mr. Hall menacing the " parishioners is false and not true.—Witness my hand,

" JOS. HALL."

" 1689.—Edward North was abated in his account for shoos he sold to the poor, " that the towne paid for, six shillings eight pence, he being overseer, which was an evill " example to them that come after, he being a shoemaker.

" 1690.—It is ordered that the Guild Hall shall be put in repair as to the tiling " and daubing by the overseers.

" 1689.—A list of ye persons' names in the Parish of Stoak next Nayland, in " the County of Suffolk, have contributed towards the Relief of the distressed Irish " Protestants, together with an account of the funds by them respectively given in the " month of September, in the year of Our Lord 1689, in ye first year of the reign of " King William:—

	s.	d.
" Sir Charles Umfreville, ffive pounds	100	00

" And 190 other names with the sums given.

" The names of the persons that would not give anything to this charitable use are " as follows:—

	s.	d.
" Mr. Reeve, Vicar	00	00
" Sir Wm. Mannock	00	00
" Mr. Francis Mannock	00	00

" Joseph Hull, and eight other signatures.

In handwriting of the Vicar :—

" This briefe was unduely and illegally collected, as witnesseth,

" Mr. Thomas Ffirmin, the sum of 13 pounds, and four pounds collected in the Parish
" of Stoke by Nayland upon their Majesties' Briefe for the Reliefe of the poor Irish
" Protestants, I say received for Leonard Robinson, Esq., Chamberlain of London,
" whereof 12 pence bad money from Thos. White.

" 1689.—Published and collected the 3^d briefe for the ffrench Protestants, Sept. 23,
" and collected eighteen shillings and fourpence halfpenny.

" Item that Sir Umfreville, and others by his example, refused to give any relief
" as is desired by the said brief in a letter sent therewith.

" THOS. REEVE, Vicar."

" 1689. May 17.—The twenty shillings levied by the constables upon Rob^t Adye
" for his keeping an alehouse or tippling house, and selling ale and beer, may be " disposed of to the use of the poor as followeth." Then follow the names of 20 poor people who each receive a shilling. There are other entries of the same kind relating to tippling houses.

" 1690.—At a parish meeting 23. ffebruarie, 1690, it is ordered that Isaac Fenning,
" and he only, should have all the right that the towne hath of setting up fayre stuff or
" stalls for St. Mathias fayre or May fayre, for and during the terme of seaven years,
" paying therefor to the churchwardens of the said parish for the use of this parish at
" or upon the 4th day of May yearly, and every year during the term aforesaid the sum
" of twenty shillings. It is further ordered that neither the widdow Hall, John Till,
" Abraham Garratt, Edward Mumford, W. Staybroke, wid. Earle, wid. Groom, Samuel
" Gudden, John Well, John Sadd or his wife, wid. King, James Smith, nor any other " person whatsoever do presume for to build or set up any stalls, booths, or fayre stuff
" in any of the said fayres during the said terme contrary to the antient usage and
" right belonging to the said parish, excepting the said Isaac Fenning, and if any person
" do sett up any stalls or fayre stuffe, or molest or hinder the said Isaac Fenning from
" setting up stalls or fayre stuff in the said fayres, or from enjoying the benefit granted
" him as aforesaid, they shall be sued by the churchwardens for the time being at the " charge of the parish.

" 1701.—Received of several persons for being convicted of swearing, 7 shillings.

" 1702.—It is ordered that the right which this parish hath of letting out stalls at

" the fayres next upon St. Mathias' Day and the 5th May, be let to John Wilsher of this parish, joiner, for seven years, he paying yearly to the churchwardens upon the 4th May in every year the sum of ten shillings, and it is also ordered that none beside the said John Wilsher shall get or let out any stall upon the aforesaid fayre days, it always having been accounted the right of this parish to do it.

" 1704.—A piece of land belonging to one of the poor houses let for 4 pence a year.

" 1705.—Received of Michael Beaumont for a piece of land taken out of wid. Purslow's yard.

" 1707.—Paid £10 pounds to E. Winall for producing deed relating to almshouses on Downs.

" Turnpike at Higham Bridge to be repaired, and also a breach going down Scotland Street to be mended.

" 1694.—Ordered that there be watch and ward at all usual places in the town, that is at the watch house in the town, at Mr. Williams' at Thorington Street, at Loft Bridge, at Wythermarsh Green, at Scotland St., and that the watchmen have gunpowder found them at the charge of the parish, and use . . . and render what is necessary, and to watch six each place, three at the watch house every night.

" 1695.—The briefe for the burning in the city of Warwick was published by the minister of the parish of Stoke Nayland, on Sunday fornoon after Divine service; read Aprill, 1695, and collected from house to house three following days, one £ one s. and twopence.

THS. REEVE, Vicar."

" 1699.—That Mr T. Reeve be rated and taxed in all parish taxes and rates for the vicarage and all other things which by law he ought to have, notwithstanding any order formerly made to the contrary, and the said parishioners revoke any orders heretofore made for the excusing of the said Ths. Reeve from being rated, or from paying any parish rate.

" 1704.—Whereas Michael Beaumont for the more convenient repairing of his house called the Club Room, did take in a small part of ground appertaining to one of the poor houses belonging to this parish, we do consent that the said Michael Beaumont, his heirs and assigns, shall quietly enjoy the said ground, as long as he payeth to the overseers of this parish four pence per annum on Lady Day, or within 10 days after.

" 1718.—That no money be spent at Easter at the parish charge.

" 1719.—The coroner having charged 14s. for holding an inquest on the body of a man belonging to East Bergholt found dead in Stoke, Mr. Gurdon declared, that nothing was due to the coroner from either parish, who could not demand or recover anything in any such case for doing his office.

" 1719.—It was ordered by the parishioners now present, that they shall spend five "shillings this day (at the Angell) and also every first Wednesday in the month.

"Rd. Serjeant, Will. James, John Wiltshire, Ed. Holton, Ths. James.

"1721.—Ordered that 40 shillings be paid to Mr. Harrington, surgeon, over and "above his salary for the year past, for the extraordinary illnesse which have happened
"to the poore.

"1728.—Ordered that the buckets and rope of the town well be put into repair,
"and the bucket be locked to the side of the well, and that Rob^t Bond keep the key,
"not to suffer anybody to have any water but the poor, that the rest pay for it.

"1728.—That the Gate House Chamber coming into the chyard., be pulled down
"and the timber and tyles be laid up in the Guildhall till wanted for the parish use.

"1732.—It was agreed that Sir John Williams have leave to pull down the three
"tenements at the church gate, and to set them up again in the churchyard, where
"Sarah Freeman lived, at his own cost, and then the land they stand upon be valued
"and conveyed to the said Sir John Williams.

"1733.—The land was surveyed, reckoned at 5 rods, sold to Sir J. Williams for
"15 shillings."

The following extracts relate to the relief of the poor, maintenance of children, &c. :—

"1689. July 23.—Ordered at a parish meeting that the overseers for the parish to "provide masters for all the poor children of the parish who are fit to be bound
"apprentice, and to have such masters and children at the next parish meeting, in order
"to bind such children apprentices.

"1690.—At a parish meeting held the 2nd day of June, 1690, the overseers for the "year and parishioners of this parish, did consider the condition and wants of the poore
"of this parish, and did order that the several poor persons hereafter named should "receive a weekly pension as followeth." Then follow the names of several children kept and apprenticed, and then the names of the aged, with their weekly allowance ; as Sara ffreman, aged 3 skor and eleven.

"Ordered at the same meeting that there shall be allowed for the winding sheet of "every poor person but 6 pence if it can be bought so, and twelve pence for laying of
"them forth.

"It is further ordered that George Penry shall goe with the widdow Hodges'

The High - Church Hieroglyphick
 Represented in the Sign of the E M B L E M E,
 Put up at an Inn in STOKE by Naland, in Suffolk.

AN EXPLANATION of the EMBLEME.

Behold the Church, which some Men say has stood,
 Unmov'd iron Times before the mighty Flood:
 Its Basis laid in the Auspicious Reign
 Of that most Glorious Murdering Monarch Cain;
 By Murdering Levites then, Potent'd and Rul'd,
 Whose Progeny, till now, the People Cull'd.
 Its vast Foundation to great Depths they fix,
 Down to the very Banks of Sulphurous Six;
 Whose Fiery Waves with Hideous Noise do Roar,
 Admit no Bounds, but warp away the Shore:
 Its Spires above the Clouds they Proudly rear,
 Cover'd about by Demons of the Air.
 This is High-Church, as its Devotes her call;
 This is the Church you see enclin'd to Fall.
 Stay, Passenger, a while the EMBLEME view,
 Say, Is a Church that's False, or One that's True?
 If True, she's out of Danger of a Fall;
 'Gainst her the Power of Hell can ne'er prevail:
 If False, as we have by Experience found,
 Elsest be the Hands shall raise her to the Ground.

Preposterous Sight! That Devils shou'd Inva'de,
 And Spoil the Work that their own Hands have made.
 Yes, Spectator, Preposterous is the SIGN,
 That those who Build the Church should UNDERMINE:
 'Tis not Infernal Devils, nor those that Fly,
 But its own Sins has weigh'd its Spires awry.
 Next view its Sons, the Butterflies o' the Dome,
 How they with Zeal to its Assistance come;
 With Brawny Shoulders strive to underprop,
 And keep the vast declining Fabrick Up;
 The High-Tanney-Priests, the Tacking-Elsew,
 Who would, to Ruin England, Damn themselves.
 See the Non-Cons, and Moderate-Churchmen Laugh,
 To find themselves, by High-Church Fall, more safe.
 Thus Virtue thrives when Vice is most suppress,
 And Hell restrain'd, adds Numbers to the Blest.
 Let High-Church stand, or let it tumble down,
 Its Peoples Eolly in their Motto's shown,
 Who take a Rising for a Setting Sun.

The following extract from the catalogue of prints and drawings in the British Museum, Political and Personal Series, printed by order of the Trustees, 1873, Vol. II, from 1689-1733, will explain the curious picture on the opposite page. The photograph is taken from a print in my possession :—

“ The year 1706 was signalized in the history of English satire, by the appearance of a large number of pictorial attacks on the leaders and objects of the opposed sections, respectively styled the High Church and Low Church parties. Dr. Sacheverell was assailed in ‘Needs must when the Devil drives,’ and in ‘The Great Llama and the three Oculists,’ where he was associated with Reed and Grant, two notorious quack doctors. Dr. Sacheverell’s antagonist, Dr. Hoadly, was the subject of attack in ‘Like coachman, like cause,’ No. 1,447, where he rides postilion with the Devil and blows ‘Tantara Low Church’ on a horn. No. 1,465, thus described in this catalogue, is entitled ‘The High Church Hieroglyphick,’ represented in the sign of the embleme put up at an inn, Stoke-by-Nayland, Suffolk. The engraving represents a high road opposite to an inn, in front of which a large sign is suspended. On this is depicted a falling church, supported by two Bishops and other Ecclesiastics, over whom is a sun issuing from the clouds, with this motto, ‘We shall rise.’ Higher up is a meridian sun, with the motto, ‘We are risen.’ Standing and looking on are a group of persons, some in clerical, some in lay dresses, but all with bands round their necks. Below the church are demons with spades and pickaxes. In the road in front of the inn, and under the sign, appear several persons on foot and horseback, who, while passing, look up at the sign, a man stands at the door of an inn and smokes a pipe of tobacco, a lady stands in the balcony, which is on the first floor of the inn; then follows a rhyming explanation of the embleme. The size of the engraving is $8\frac{7}{8}$ in. by $5\frac{3}{4}$ in.”

I find in the Overseers’ and Churchwardens’ books no allusion to any exhibition of party or political feeling in the year 1706. It is evident, however, from the collections made through briefs, that there were two parties in the parish, Protestant and Anti-Protestant; Sir C. Umfreville headed one, the Vicar, the Mannocks, and Mr. Hall the other, and ten years later the Vicar is taxed in all parish rates and taxes, from which he had hitherto been exempted. This broadside shows that in 1706 this party feeling must have risen to a great height.

The Umfrevilles took an active part in parish matters as far back as Dowsing’s visit,

February 21, 1644, as this extract from his journal will show:—"At Mr. Thomas Humberfield's or Sumberfield's, I brake down 9 superstitious pictures, and a crucifix in the parish of Stoke—he refused to pay the 6s. 8d.—this was in the Lord Windsor's Chapel."

Against the wall at the west end of the south chapel hung a frame of wood with these words painted in black letters on a gold ground:—

"To the memory of Elizabeth Umfreville, wife of William Umfreville, who died April 28th, 1645, ætatis 38. Arms above gules, a cinquefoil with an orle of 8 crosses impaling vert a griffin seargent holding in his dexter paw a fleur de lis. Crest out of a ducal coronet or an eagle's head, arg."

This is a kind of hatchment—

"The Umfrevilles were said to be of the ancient house of Umfreville, Earl of Angus. Charles Umfreville, of Stoke by Nayland, was knighted May 12th, 1661. He was the son of William Umfreville, of Langham, in Essex.

"Thomas Umfreville, son of Thomas Umfreville, whom some think to be of an ancient family, was a taylor, and raised an estate, which before was come to a small matter, and lived at Stoke in 1655."—From Davy's Collectanea.

The hatchments having been broken and defaced during the restoration of the church, I have had the anastatic drawing made of it which is given here.

The pane of glass with the motto "Disce pati," etc., of which a drawing is given, was the only fragment of painted glass left when the church was restored in 1866.

The population of Stoke taken in the census of 1851, was 1,406; in 1871, 1,174. In 20 years the decrease was 232 inhabitants.

Explanation of some Words used in this Compilation.

"Manor," from the French manoir, a word brought in by the Normans, the place of residence of the chief lord. The constitution of a manor was this: The king granted to some baron or military man a certain circuit of ground for him or his heirs to dwell upon and to enjoy, holding some part in demesne to their own use and occupation, and letting out others to free or servile tenants, who were to do their suit and service at the court of the said manor, now called the Lord's Court, or Court Baron.

"Demesne," from Latin dominion, that part of the estate which the lord keeps in his own hands, or to his own use; the land adjoining the manor which the lord did not let out to feudatory or servile tenants, but rather cultivated it himself, or assigned to tenants at will.

"Soca," from the Saxon roc, right and jurisdiction.

"Saca," the power and privilege of hearing and determining causes, levying forfeitures and fines, &c., within a certain precinct.

"Soca," was the territory or precinct in which the "Saca" was exercised.

"Socage," was a tenure of land by which a man was enfeoffed freely or in fee simple, without any military service, paying only to the lord a stated rent in money or provisions. So the kings of England often farmed out their demesne lands, as Brill, in Bucks, let out in socage for the reserve of 100 capons to the king's table.

"Villani," from villa, a country farm, rather than from "vilis," base. In the villa these men of low condition had some portion of land and cottages allotted to them, for which they were bound to certain works and other corporal service. They were divided into two classes, the villanes in gross, the sole property of their lord, moveable and alienable at pleasure; the villanes appendant to a manor ascripti glebæ, a pertinence to the manor, passed along to the heir or every new lord.

"Servi," servile tenants. No author seems to have fixed the distinction between servus and villanus, though their servitude must have been different, for in Domesday Book the distinction is always made.

"Bordarii," from the Saxon Bopð, a house. The "Bordarii," so often mentioned in Domesday Book, were distinct from the servi and villani, and seem to have been of a less servile condition, holding a bopð or cottage, with a small parcel of land allowed them, on condition they should supply the lord with poultry and eggs, and other small provisions for his board and entertainment.—See Parochial Antiquities, by White Kennett, Vicar of Ambrosden, Oxford. 1695.

"Caruca," as much arable land as in one year could be tilled with one plough. In some places it was reckoned equal to sixty, in some to ninety, in others to one hundred and fifty.

"Hide," not from the hide of a beast, as if it equalled the extent of Carthage, "Quantum taurino possint circumdare tergo," but from Saxon hyð, hyðan, to cover. The quantity of land was never expressly determined; by some it was thought to be equal to 120 acres, by others only 96. In Domesday Book, the arable land was measured by caracutes, the common pasture by hides, and the meadow by acres.

It may be inferred, searchers of cloth being found in the list of officers appointed in 1670, that the manufacture of cloth must have been carried on in that day in the parish, and also from the omission of such appointments a few years after, it must have then been on the decline. These officers were evidently appointed to prevent impositions practised by the manufacturers. In 22 Car. II, cap. cxxii, is an entertaining statute relating to the abuses practised by the Dutch bay and say workers, who had been allowed by Queen Elizabeth to establish themselves at Colchester, and in § 3 it is enacted "that if any person shall buy any of the said bays, or cause such bays to be conveyed out of the said town of Colchester, before such time as the said bay has been viewed, searched, stamped, sealed, and measured as aforesaid by the town officers of the said Dutch Bay Hall, the said bay shall be confiscated."

"Blodeus, or Blodius," from Saxon Blōð, of a deep red colour, or what we call as red as blood. Hence to blush or turn red in the face; bloated herrings, herrings made red; pannus bloteus, a red livery; toga blodia, a red coat.

The following wills of those who have been benefactors to the parish may prove interesting. The originals of those of Thomas Purslowe and Lady Ann Windsor are in the parish chest in the church :—
